NEW HANIHARA NOTE DISCLAIMS VEILED THREAT

Elucidates "Grave Consequences."

U. S. Envoy Worried?

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

HONOLULU, T. H., April 19.—A cable from Tokio to the Nippu Jiji, a local Japanese newspaper, states that the American ambassador, Cyrus Woods, has cabled President Coolidge urging him to veto the Japanese immigration bill.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., April 19.—[Special.]—Masanao Hanihara, the Japanese ambassador, in a letter to Secretary of State Hughes last Thursday which was made public today, disavowed any thought of uttering a threat when he said in his letter of April 10 that enactment of Japanese exclusion legislation by the United States would bring "grave consequences upon the otherwise happy and mutually advantageous relations between our two countries."

MASANAO HANIHARA. [Harris & Ewing.]

The ambassador was greatly shocked by the interpretation of his protest in the senate.

This interpretation, the ambassador explains, was grievously mistaken. All he had meant to say was that whereas there is "hearty coöperation" existing between Japan and the United States the enactment of an exclusion law "would create, or at least tend to create, an unhappy atmosphere of ill feeling and misgivings over the relations between our two countries."

Believe Situation Is Unchanged.

In some quarters the ambassador's denial is regarded as strengthening the position of Secretary Hughes who has regarded the exclusion legislation a mistaken policy from the start and has counseled the admission of Japanese on a quota basis.

Secretary Hughes is reported to have advised the President to veto the bill.

Administration leaders in congress expressed the opinion tonight, however, that the latest exchange of letters between the ambassador and Mr. Hughes would not change the situation.

The bill with the exclusion clause intact will go to the President in a few days, it was predicted, and, if Mr. Coolidge should veto it, it would be repassed.

The Revised Letter.

The ambassador's letter to Mr. Hughes follows:

"In reading the Congressional Record of April 14, 1924, I find that the letter I addressed to you on April 10, a copy of which you sent to the chairman of the senate committee on immigration, was made a subject of discussion in the senate. In the Record it is reported that some of the senators expressed the opinion, which was apparently accepted by many other members of that body, that my letter contained 'a veiled threat.'

"As it appears from the Record that it is the phrase 'grave consequences,' which I used in the concluding part of my letter, that some of the senators construed as 'a veiled threat,' I may be permitted to quote here full text of the sentence which contained the words in question.

A More Complete Quotation.

"'Relying upon the confidence you have been good enough to show me at all times, I have stated or rather repeated all this to you very candidly and in a most friendly spirit, for I realize, as I believe you do, the grave consequences which the enactment of the measure retaining that particular provision would inevitably bring upon the otherwise happy and mutually advantageous relations between our two countries.'

"Frankly, I must say I am unable to understand how the two words, read in their context, could be construed as meaning anything like a threat. I simply tried to emphasize the most unfortunate and deplorable effect upon our traditional friendship which might result from the adoption of a particular clause in the proposed measure.

What He Sought to Say.

"It would seriously impair the good and mutually helpful relationship and disturb the spirit of mutual regard and confidence, which characterizes our intercourse of the last three-quarters of a century and which was consid-

FINDS NO GRAFT IN $25,000,000 COLOMBIA PACT

Bogota Records Hit Oil Quiz Charge.

Charges were made before the senate Teapot Dome investigation that American oil interests "put over" the payment of $25,000,000 to Colombia for the Panama canal zone and that $5,000,000 of it was paid to unnamed parties (American) for congressional approval of the treaty. The Tribune sent a correspondent to Bogota to investigate. Here is his report.

BY FREDERICK WRIGHT.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

BOGOTA, Colombia, April 18.—[Delayed.]—The Colombian government is indignant over charges made before the United States senate in the Teapot Dome investigation of irregularity in connection with the ratification of the Colombian treaty by the Harding administration, and there is popular resentment against American business in this country.

Representatives of American firms here complain that the publicity given the charges is causing discrimination against American goods, while British and German representatives are taking advantage of the renewed anti-American feeling to secure big orders.

I have made a complete investigation here and I find no foundation for the charges that American oil companies profited by the ratification of the Colombian treaty or that money paid to Colombia by the United States reached the hands of persons interested in "putting over" the pact.

Has Access to Government Books.

I was given access to the Colombian government's books and records and I have traced the money from the United States treasury to date. I have also read all the diplomatic correspondence for several years back.

The facts are the United States has paid Colombia $10,000,000 to date. Of this sum $5,000,000 was used as capital for the new national bank of issue and the other $5,000,000 is mostly on hand and will be used for railway construction. None of this money has been paid to foreigners.

A check-up of the general fund and accounts of the legation at Washington show no money has been paid to foreigners by Colombia except $11,600 a year for five years to Hannis Taylor, a Washington attorney, as legal adviser to the legation. I have a signed statement as to the disposition of the indemnity funds.

Sinclair Has No Interests.

Taking up the charges that oil interests were a dominant influence in securing ratification of the treaty, I find nothing to support the allegations. If a slush fund was used it was handled in the United States. Edward L. Doheny and Harry Sinclair have no interests in Colombia and they have not attempted to enter this field.

Blair & Co. of New York, in which Doheny is a partner, loaned Colombia $5,000,000 prior to the ratification of the treaty, but it did no other business here. The Tropical Oil company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil company, is the only American concern operating in Colombia.

The only concession granted to Americans since the treaty was ratified was to the Andean National corporation for a pipe line. This deal was negotiated by James W. Flanagan, 342 Madison avenue, New York. The directors of the Andean company refused to accept Colombia's offer and new negotiations are now on. Flanagan said he was a friend of former Secretary of the Interior Fall. The Andean company owns large port interests at Cartagena.

Standard Oil Has Concession.

Two oil concessions were granted to American interests some years ago—namely the De Mares concession, which is owned by the Standard Oil company, and the Barco concession, owned by Doheny and the Texas Oil company.

No company has succeeded in obtaining commercial development. It is perfectly clear that the dealings of the Colombian government have been above board and that they are free of suspicion. Colombia has not obligated itself to the oil interests. If American oil companies anticipated privileges by ratification of the treaty they have been disappointed.

BASIS OF INQUIRY

The charges that the ratification of the United States treaty with Colombia was due to the influence of American oil interests seeking concessions in the southern republic were made soon after the Senate Teapot dome inquiry began. The allegations named

GIRL IS KILLED BY UNCLE AT PARTY; ACCIDENT

Bertha Rubenovich, 14 years old, was shot and killed last night while members of her family were celebrating the Feast of the Passover at the home of her parents at 1348 North Leavitt street.

The shooting was done by her uncle, Harry Politzer. He told the police that it was accidental.

According to Politzer's story, he had recently purchased an automatic pistol. His niece asked to see it and he was showing it to her when it was accidentally discharged. The bullet struck the girl in the abdomen. Her family carried her to the Lutheran Deaconess hospital, but she was dead when they arrived.

Autoist Kills Man; Town Suspends All Auto Permits

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

SHANGHAI, China, April 19.—The city of Hangchow, near here, has adopted a novel way to prevent motor car accidents. A careless autoist killed a pedestrian. The chief of police immediately issued an order suspending all motor car licenses for a period of one month.

Flames Refine 12 Heroes Out of 12 Hoboes

Twelve dusty knights of the road, who had moved northward in the wake of the robin, strolled into La Grange a few days ago. There were smiles on their faces and the world was in tune, for there was no work to do. Finances worried them not, for their pockets contained nothing save hands. Suddenly the open road was blocked by Sam Brown belted officers. The twelve were cast into jail and their names went down on the police blotter. The charge was vagrancy. They were handed picks and shovels with which to level the ruts and bumps on the highway of adventure. The world was out of joint again.

At 10:30 yesterday morning Policeman Louis Hunsaker, belted and armed, was herding twelve lagging prisoners through the streets of La Grange on their way to pull the outlying sections out of the mud.

And the Twelve Bolted.

They were passing the La Grange sanitarium, a two-story frame structure, when one of the prisoners saw flame and smoke spouting from the roof. A shout went up. Picks and shovels were tossed to the pavement and the twelve bolted.

"Hey!" shouted Hunsaker, his hand instinctively going to his gun. And "Hey" he shouted again as twelve pairs of heels disappeared in the smoke that poured from the hospital door. Police rules had not provided for such an emergency. He didn't know whether to shoot or to cheer.

Flames were licking through the ceiling of the sterilizing room to the second floor when the prisoners entered. Groping their way through the smoke, they found and carried out five patients. They turned them over to the police and fire departments which had arrived with ambulances.

The Hero's Part.

"Miss Samuels is still in there!" warned Dr. Edwin T. Secor, superintendent of the hospital, after a hurried checkup. "She's bedridden—on the second floor."

There was a pause. Flames were racing through the second floor. Suddenly John "Happy" Weeks, a Negro, darted from the group of prisoners and vanished in the smoke. A few moments' wait and Weeks staggered out into the sunshine again, bearing in his arms Miss Martha T. Samuels.

A cheer went up from the other prisoners. Hunsaker cheered. Chief of Police L. T. Matthews cheered and shook Weeks' hand. The patients were removed to other hospitals. The prisoners were ordered to gather up their picks and shovels and march back to the jail.

"Turn 'em out," ordered the chief. "You can't keep men like that in jail as vagrants."

Twelve men, who had dubbed themselves the "dirty dozen," took the road out of La Grange yesterday. There were smiles on their faces and a vote of thanks of the village in their hearts. The world was in tune again, for they had put labor behind. They had left their names written not on a police blotter but on a roll of honor: "Happy" Weeks, "Jack" Robinson, Henry "Texas" Andrews, Walter "Bo" Hannen, Emil "Curly" Klem, Norman "Spike" Paren, "Bill" Foster, Paul "Kiester" Savage, Earl "Bunny" Badst, "Mike" Smith Willis "Spuds" Brown, and George "Shorty" Taylor.

But best of all, each jingled in his pocket $2 in spendable silver—the gift of Chief Matthews—and West Madison street soup kitchens lay just ahead.

MONEY FOR RELIEF OF FAMILIES OF FIREMEN POURING INTO FUNDS

Money for aid of the families of the eight brave firemen killed in the Blue Island avenue fire Friday night began to appear with speed yesterday.

The fund which The Tribune started had reached nearly $4,700 by last evening. Contributions from readers will be received by this paper, acknowledged, and the complete total turned over to the mayor's board for distribution among the victims. Details of the day's fund developments on page 3.

LEVIATHAN FIRE DAMAGE SMALL; TO SAIL ON TIME

SOUTHAMPTON, Eng., April 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—Fire broke out this afternoon in the saloon pantry on deck A of the liner Leviathan and burned for two hours before it was mastered. The pantry was gutted and much damage was done to the decorations through water percolating to the lower decks.

All the passengers had left the liner, which arrived today from New York. It is supposed the fire was due to the fusing of an electric heater.

An examination of the damage showed that repairs can be made with little difficulty, and no change in the sailing schedule will be necessary.

If one-tenth of an inch of rain falls between 10 a. m. and 1 p. m., the policy holder may have her money back and keep the hat. Cost of the insurance is about 9 per cent of the cost of a hat.

Three Others Injured at Rail Crossing

BULLETIN.

Four men were taken into custody by the Grand Crossing police early this morning and held for questioning regarding the mystery of the runaway B. & O. freight engine which killed three persons. The men were Max Orr, 4315 South Dearborn street; Hosea Lattie, 4641 South Evans avenue, hostlers; Peter Clark, 3233 Marquette road, and Elmer Howard, 4525 Ellis avenue, roundhouse employes. Orr and Lattie are colored.

Three persons were killed and three injured early this morning when a freight engine on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, running wild at a speed of close to fifty miles an hour, struck an automobile at 73rd street and Stony Island avenue.

The locomotive, started on its way by two unidentified men who leaped from the cab after opening the throttle, tore out of the roundhouse at 90th street and Burley avenue, leaped across a turntable, ran through a network of switches, and sped for a distance of three miles before crashing into a bumping post at a stub end of a track and turned on its side in a ditch at 70th street and Dorchester avenue.

DEAD.

OTTO BOWMARK, 8333 Paxton avenue.
MRS. OLGA BOWMARK, his wife.
IRVING BOWMARK, their 10 year old son.

INJURED.

William Lindberg, 37 years old, 7645 Cornell avenue; at South Shore hospital; may die.
Mrs. Anna Lindberg, 37 years old, his wife; at South Shore hospital.
Miss Hilda Bowmark, 31 years old, 8333 Paxton avenue, sister of Otto Bowmark.

Man Leaps from Cab.

A Negro hostler was standing outside the roundhouse at 90th street at 1:30 o'clock when he saw the locomotive come lurching out of the structure. Two men in overalls, he said, leaped from the cab as the engine gathered speed. He did not recognize the men, he old officials of the railway.

He leaped to one side as the heavy freight engine tore past. As it crossed the turntable and struck the network of switches leading out on to the Brookdale branch of the road, he said, it was going at a speed of forty miles an hour. The head light was not lit and there were no sidelights burning.

Try to Derail Engine.

The hostler rushed into the special agents' office and an operator flashed the word to the dispatcher's office. Attempts were made to throw switches and derail the flying engine along the way but in each instance the locomotive had cleared the switch before a man could reach it.

For three miles the locomotive tore along, nearer and nearer to the Illinois Central tracks where it was feared it would crash into one of the several trains scheduled over the main line of that road at that hour of the morning.

No Gates or Flagman.

The automobile containing the six persons was in the middle of the grade crossing at 73rd street and Stony Island avenue when the careening engine bore down upon it. There are no gates at the crossing, no flagman, no warning signal of any kind at that hour of the morning. Before the driver of the car could step upon tho gas the huge freight engine had leaped out of the darkness and smashed the machine to splinters. Automobile parts were scattered along the right of way for more than a block.

The bodies of the occupants of the machine were tossed clear of the right of way.

The Bowmark boy was moaning when Doughty placed the boy in his cab and drove to the South Chicago hospital but the boy was dead when that institution was reached.

ARSON SEEN AS CAUSE OF FIRE IN CURRAN HALL

Coroner Says He'll Name Slayers.

Two separate fires were eating into Curran hall Friday night when firemen arrived, according to evidence presented to the coroner's jury, which late yesterday afternoon opened an official investigation into the disaster which cost the lives of nine and injured more than a score.

FIRE MARSHAL EDWARD J. BUCKLEY. [Moffett Photo.]

The testimony of seven firemen, one of them a battalion chief, who were first to arrive at the blazing Curran building, convinced Coroner Oscar Wolff that the fire was of incendiary origin. He made the following statement:

"The lives of nine men, eight of them brave firemen, have been lost because some one set fire to Curran hall. There is no longer any doubt. We are turning our attention to the job of discovering the names of the incendiaries. They will be prosecuted."

Others Equally Convinced.

Similiar statements were made by Fire Marshal Edward J. Buckley, Assistant State's Attorney Robert McMillan, and Fire Attorney James Donahoe, all of whom are making investigations into the holocaust and who took part in the opening session of the inquest.

The coroner's inquest was postponed three times yesterday. It is scheduled to open at 10 o'clock in the morning, but Coroner Wolff encountered difficulties in obtaining a jury and the session was not called to order until 3:45 in the afternoon.

Meanwhile the agencies investigating the fire had been making rapid progress. Three men were under arrest before noon. They were held incommunicado at the Maxwell street station, although an attorney appeared before Judge John R. Caverly of the Criminal court with a writ of habeas corpus. Judge Caverly set the writ for hearing at 10 o'clock Monday morning. The men held are:

SAMUEL MOORE, 3127 Douglas boulevard.

LEO UNELL, 1217 South Racine avenue. Moore and Unell are partners in the Leather Sporting and Novelty company, which had offices in Curran hall.

SAMUEL POLINSKY, 1528 North Campbell avenue, a friend of Moore and Unell.

They were taken into custody by police assigned to the fire attorney's office and were questioned throughout the day.

Inquest Is Dramatic.

The inquest was dramatic. Forty firemen, comrades of those eight who gave their lives Friday night, assembled with policemen, attorneys, investigators, and newspaper men in the Maxwell street court as the jury took their places. Coroner Wolff called the session to order and took the names of the jurors.

They are: A. H. Smith, vice president of the Madison and Kedzie bank, foreman; P. H. Kube, 3217 Madison street, a haberdasher; G. A. Foster, 3111 West Madison street, president of the Garfield Park Storage company; Henry P. Maun, 3227 West Madison street, a real estate dealer; T. T. Tyrrell, 3112 West Madison street, a real estate dealer, and Oscar H. Burke, 3163 West Madison street, president of the Burke Express company.

The jurors had been sworn to their duty at the morgues where the nine dead men rested. A silence fell over the courtroom as Michael S. Kerwin, chief of the 7th battalion, took the witness stand.

Was First to Arrive.

"My battalion was the first to arrive at the fire and as leader I was immediately in charge," Chief Kerwin said. "I could see flames coming out of the roof. The door leading to the front stairway was locked. We broke it in and saw the stairs were ablaze."

The chief stopped a moment. Heads were pushed forward. The jurymen were alert.

"I saw a running fire," the chief continued. "Flames seemed to be sweeping down those stairs. Not up the stairs as fires usually run, but down. It looked like an oil fire. I sent my chauffeur to call more engine companies, more hook and ladder companies."

"What did you do next?" asked the coroner.

Fires Not Connected.

"I ordered my pipemen to go up those stairs and to put out the flames as they climbed. Then I went to the rear. I saw a fierce fire in the rear stairway. It was not connected with the fire in the front of the building.

"We climbed up the fire escape of the building to the south of Curran hall and I looked at the roof. I went down to the ground and up into the hall and I discovered the danger. I ordered everybody out of the building."

"Did they get out?"

"Not at once. There may have been fourteen men on the fourth floor. I ordered them out a second time. Another chief, who had come in on a second alarm, said that they had the fire, that we could get at it, but I repeated my order.

Tells of Fatal Crash.

"I then climbed to the roof of the building next to the hall a second time and just as I arrived there the wall went. The roof went first. It seemed to push the front wall outward. I heard the crash. There was no explosion. I went to the street and helped take out the dead and injured.

"Regarding the running fire on the front stairs—did it smoke to any great extent?" asked the coroner.

"No. It was much like an oil fire, running down and burning hot, but not smoking much.

Capt. George Kilby, hook and ladder company No. 5, was the next witness. He was in charge of the first squad of firefighters to arrive at the rear of the fire.

"We found a fierce fire burning up and down the four floors of the stairway," he testified. "It was too hot to go after without pressure. I couldn't tell whether it was anything more than a wood fire or not; it was one of the hottest fires I have ever experienced.

Was in Fall.

"I went to the front of the building and discovered another fire in the front. The two were not connected. I was with Chief Kerwin when the wall fell over."

Henry Huebner, chauffeur for Chief Kerwin, followed to the witness stand.

"I went onto the front stairway with the chief," he testified. "I saw the fire traveling downward. It did not travel up the stairs. There was something more than just wood burning."

Other witnesses who corroborated the "double fire" story were Lieut. William Miller of engine company No. 18, Lieut. Joseph Toberman, who arrived on the second alarm, and Capt. William Bieze of squad No. 2.

Heard No Explosion.

Each witness said that there was no explosion, that there were two separate fires, and that the roof fell in, pushing the Blue Island avenue wall outwards.

Following the testimony of Huebner, Coroner Wolff asserted that the agencies investigating the disaster desired additional time to complete their work and that the hearing would be continued. It was set for 10 o'clock Tuesday morning and will be held in the Maxwell street station.

Two important developments in the investigation were discovered by Assistant State Fire Marshal P. J. McDonald, who with his assistant, E. C. Miller, were early on the scene of the disaster.

Small Blaze Last Year.

Marshal McDonald learned that a small blaze occurred in Curran hall on Dec. 23. The building was owned by Alex Ginsberg, 1431 South Spaulding avenue, and according to the marshal's statements, $2,000 insurance was paid for the midwinter fire damage.

The other discovery was the story told by the parents of Samuel Kraviecz, 1132 West 14th place, who is 14 years old.

According to the parents, the lad was on the back porch, from which the rear of Curran hall is visible, a few minutes before the flames were discovered. A man jumped out of the doorway, where fire was first noted five minutes later, and ran down the alley. An effort is being made to learn who the man was and why he was in such haste to leave the building.

When Moore, Unell and Polinsky were taken into the Maxwell street station the persons crowded into the place and out on the street heard of the trio's apprehension. Words ran like wildfire through the crowd and threats arose. Deputy Superintendent of Police Michael Zimmer ordered the station and streets cleared of people.

Doubled Insurance Recently.

Unell and Moore arrived at the station with a determination not to talk. They refused questions at first, but later admitted that recently the insurance on their property in Curran hall had been increased.

It was discovered that their stock was insured for $32,000 and that that represented a recent doubling of the policy. Both denied having the policy in their possession, saying that it was in the hands of a friend. When first questioned they made no mention of Polinsky. Then the police took Curtiss Fitzpatrick, colored porter for the novelty company, into custody.

"They left the building with another man sometime before the fire," Fitzpatrick said. Further questioning revealed that the other man was Polinsky, who was promptly brought to the station. Still further examination disclosed that Polinsky had the insurance policy at his home, 1528 North Campbell avenue, where it was later found by the police.

"I turned the policy over to Polinsky because he has a safety deposit box in a west side bank," admitted Moore. "I gave them to him for safe keeping."

Time Element Enters.

The authorities then set out to learn exactly how many minutes before the fire was discovered the three men left the building.

The story told by the porter, Fitzpatrick, was that the men left the building at 1:35 o'clock Friday afternoon. He said they were going to Unell's home for the keys to lock up the quarters and that about ten minutes after they left. Unell's son appeared at the building with the keys.

"I locked up and started for my home," said Fitzpatrick. "Reaching it, a few doors away, I looked back and saw flames coming from the roof." He returned to the place, arriving there just as the firemen appeared.

During the day James Carroll, member of truck company No. 12, fought for his life. He was in the County hospital, and doctors, who never left his bedside all day, said that he was hovering between life and death. At 11 o'clock last night it was stated that the chances for his life were diminishing. He had been alternately conscious and unconscious all evening and the doctors said his life was ebbing away. Carroll's death would raise the roll of heroes who gave their lives to ten.

Fire Commissioner John F. Cullerton asserted that the lives of the firemen would not have been lost if a general inspection system, such as is now before the city council, was in effect.

"It is a well known fact that the lives could have been saved if the firemen had known the type of building they were going into," said Chief Cullerton. "It is a great misfortune that Chicago firemen do not know our buildings. Every fireman ought to know just exactly what type of construction was used in every building in his district.

"There has been no thorough inspection of Chicago's buildings since 1911 although a general inspection was made in 1917 after the double platoon system was put into effect.

"There are thirty-five men in the downtown office which is charged with the inspection of the city's buildings. There are 450,000 buildings in this city outside of the private homes and I'll venture to say that the average fireman knows but little outside of his own home. How can a fireman fight a fire when he doesn't know how the building was constructed? He can't. And until every fireman does know what is inside of the buildings in his district we will have recurrent disasters like the one of Friday night."

BRAVEST OF BRAVE

No braver lot of men than those in the Chicago fire department were ever assembled in a body anywhere, declared Fire Marshal Edward Buckley yesterday. Heroism, unsurpassed in the city's history, was displayed in the fire at Curran hall, which cost nine firemen their lives and resulted in serious injuries to many others.

"Utterly reckless of death and danger, they performed one of the finest exhibitions that a department, noted for years for its bravery, ever exhibited," said Marshal Buckley. "Other fires have brought our heroism on the part of fire fighters, but I never saw a display of daring equal to last night's.

"What makes me proudest of the members of the fire department is that after the wall collapsed there was a stampede of firemen directly into that mass of blazing debris, which endangered their lives every moment. They attacked the ruins with their bare hands to rescue their fellow members.

"The loss of property either to the owners of the building or the fire department, is as nothing compared with the loss of those men who walked unhesitatingly into the face of death. The explosion came without the slightest warning and swept the men with it.

"It is murder if an incendiary started this fire."

POLICEMAN IN HEROIC ACT SAVES WOMAN

The heroism of Policeman Cornelius Delehany of the Rogers Park station saved the life of Mrs. Eliza B. Madden of 1133 Albion avenue yesterday, when he carried her to safety from her apartment that was enveloped in flames. The fire originated in the basement of the building and crept to the apartment of J. P. Moynihan on the first floor. Mrs. Madden resides with the Moynihan family.

Mrs. Madden had remained in the flat in an effort to extinguish the flames, while her nephew, Eugene O'Brien, ran for aid. He called to Policeman Delehany and explained that his aunt was in the building. The fire was making a rapid headway. Using a handkerchief as a mask, Delehany found Mrs. Madden unconscious on the floor. He carried her to the street.

CHICAGO OPENS PURSE TO AID THE BEREAVED

Tribune Fund in One Day Nearly $4,300.

Chicago was quick yesterday to express its sympathy both in words and offers of more substantial assistance to the bereaved families of the firemen who lost their lives in the disastrous Blue Island avenue fire.

Contributions to the fund proposed by THE TRIBUNE yesterday morning began to come in with speed and generosity. Before night, including the $1,000 contribution by THE TRIBUNE, the fund was approximately $4,300. Some of these contributors announced by telephone that their checks were in the mails.

Other agencies for procuring financial help to those whose support is taken away by the deaths of the firemen got under way. A call for a special meeting of the city council for tomorrow was sent out by City Clerk F. Gorman and Mayor Dever wired from Washington he will let no red tape stand in the way to retard speedy financial succor.

To Ask $200,000.

Fire Commissioner John F. Cullerton announced that he will go before the meeting tomorrow morning and ask that a fund of $200,000 be created—a trust fund from which the widows and children will receive benefits for the rest of their lives. He suggests that half of this amount be raised in subscriptions of $100 each by 1,000 business and professional men and the rest by popular subscription. Mr. Cullerton also proposes this fund should be administered by a committee composed of representatives from various civic organizations, with Mayor Dever as chairman.

City Fund Inadequate.

Fire Marshal Edward Buckley pointed out that the $5,000 allotted by the city to the families of policemen and firemen killed on duty is "far from adequate" to meet the needs of most such dependents.

We should raise enough by relief funds so that the annual allotment to each family will be sufficient at least until the children finish their education."

To the families of victims who belonged to the Firemen's Benevolent and the Firemen's Mutual Benefit associations funds will be immediately available, but the amounts vary according to the records of the dead men, as well as length of service and other conditions.

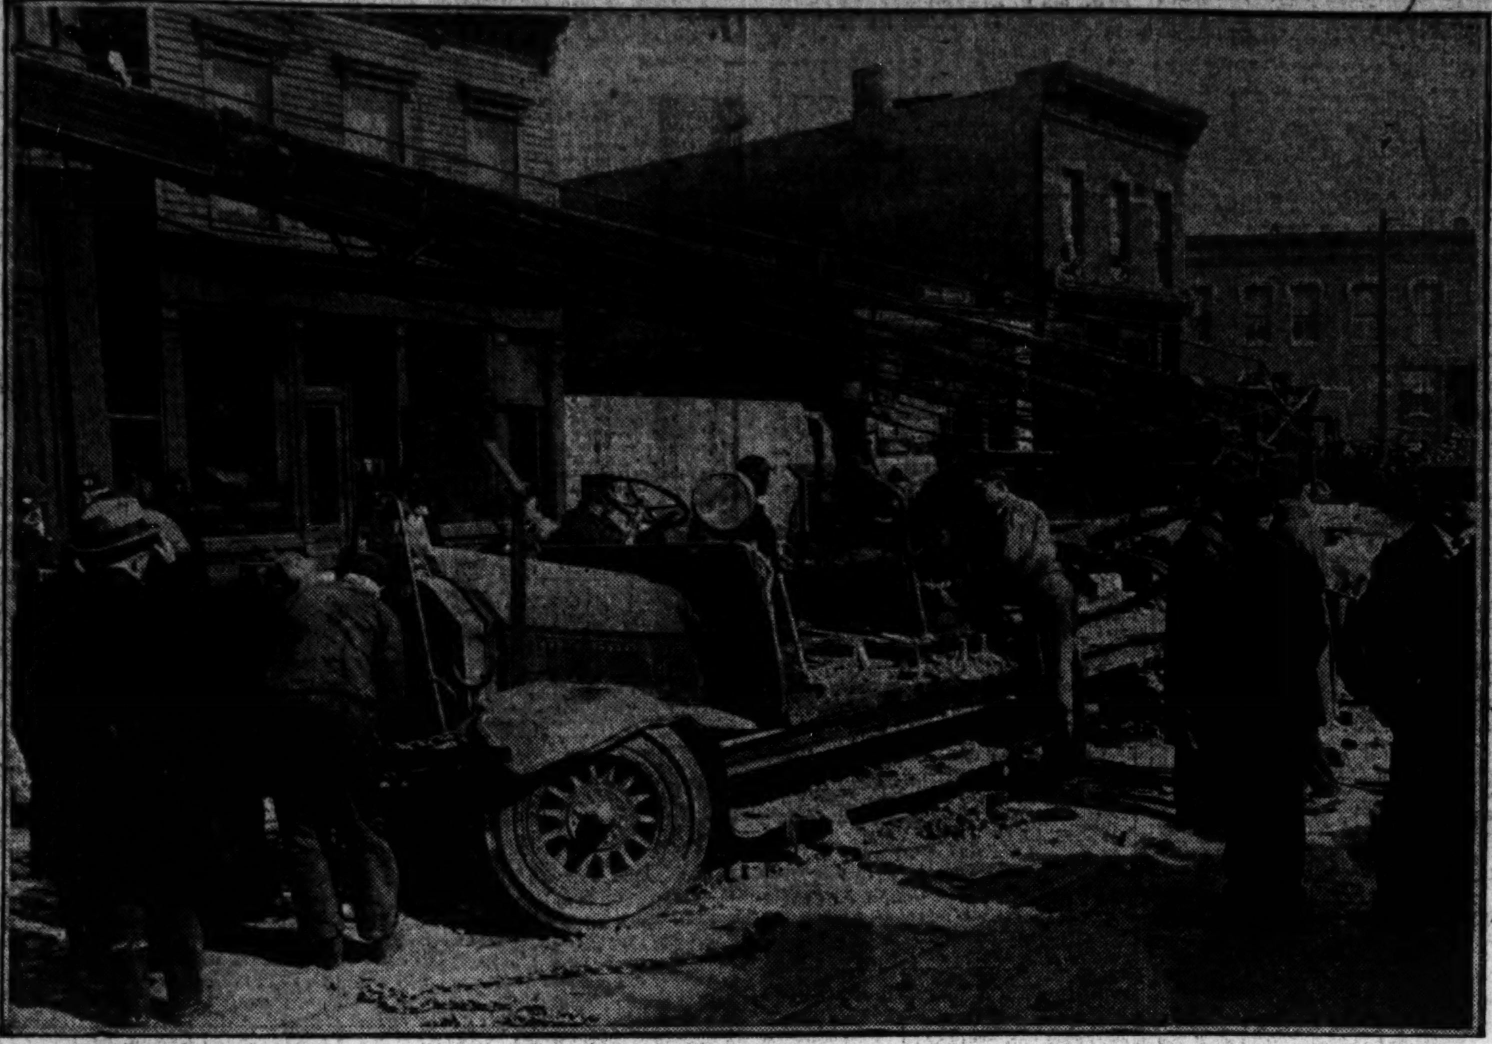
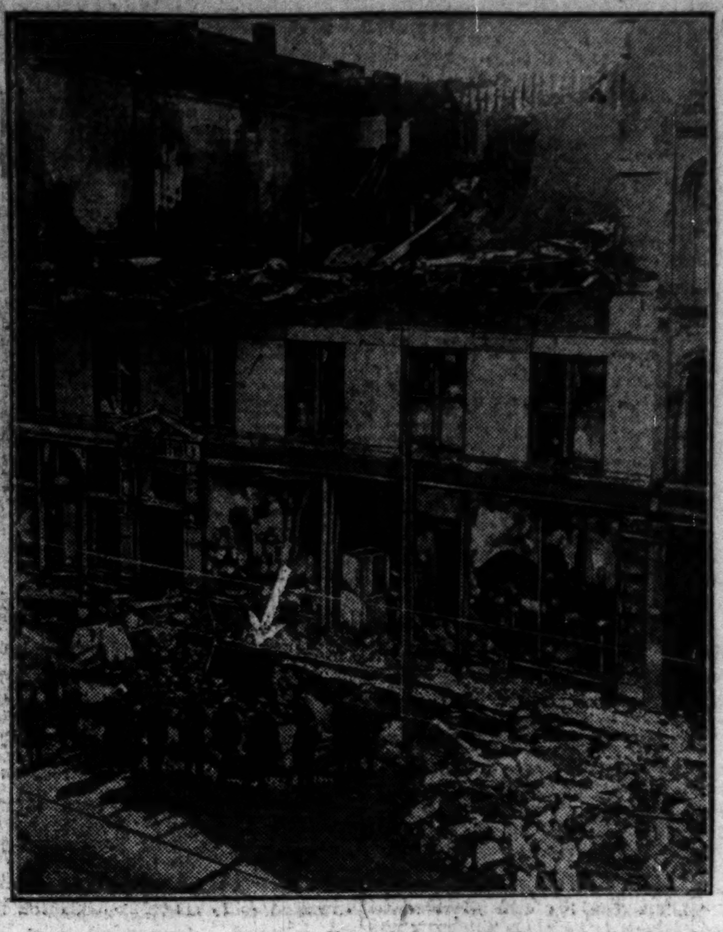
GLIMPSES OF HAVOC WROUGHT BY CURRAN HALL FIRE

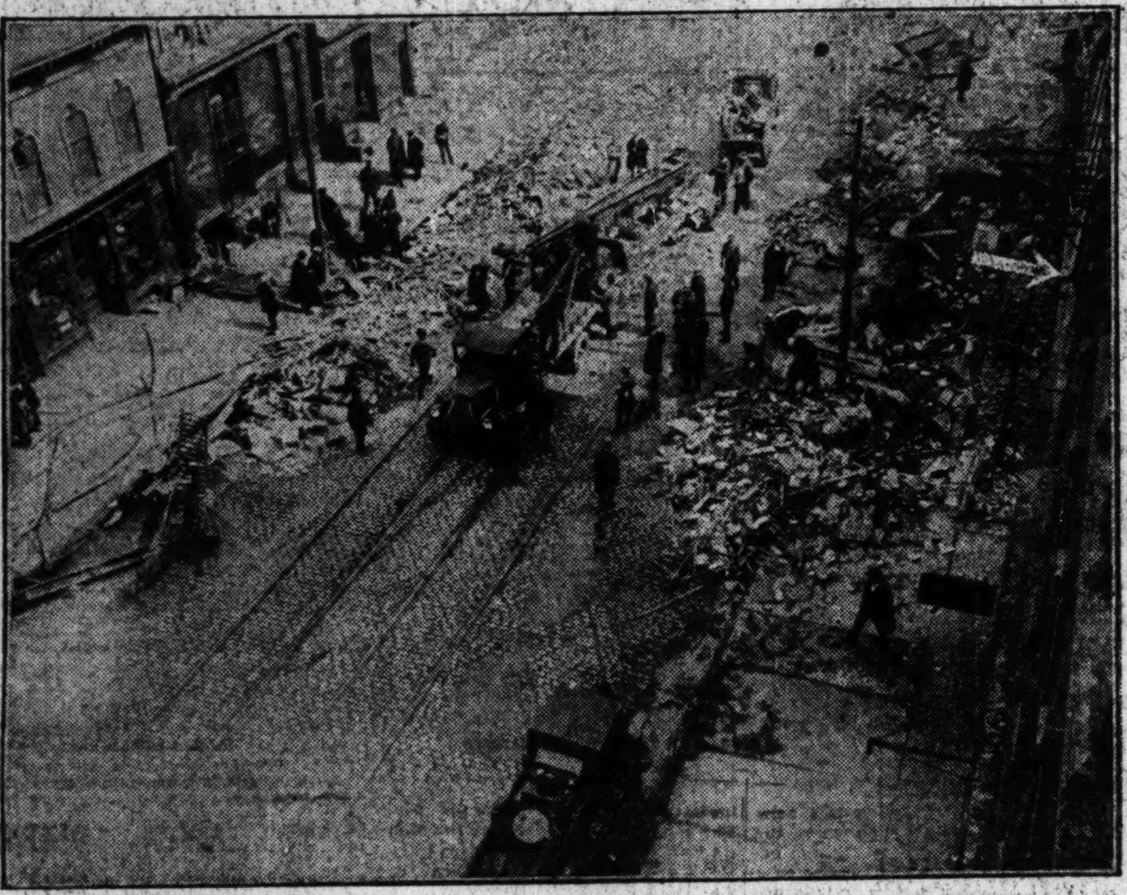


The city's new steel water tower had been erected in the center of flames and some twenty firemen were mounted on it when the wall collapsed, burying the tower under tons of bricks. Fire officials say the tower, which cost $20,000, is damaged beyond repair.

[TRIBUNE Photos.]



This is all that remains standing of Curran hall, an old landmark at 1363 Blue Island avenue. The lower two stories of its walls stood, but the upper two gave way completely.



Curious throngs wandered back and forth yesterday in front of the fire ravaged building. Part of the fire fighting equipment ruined by the falling wall remained on the debris littered street.

FAMILIES OF FIRE HEROES MUST BE AIDED

Five firemen killed in the blast at Curran's dance hall, 1363 Blue Island avenue, left behind them little children and wives who have none to support them.

One fireman left a 72 year old mother, ill and alone. In only a few cases is there insurance, and that in each case small.

Mrs. Michael Devine, 210 North Kilbourne avenue, soon is to become a mother. A baby died recently. She must support herself and the baby that is to be.

Mrs. Francis X. Leavey, 6507 South Whipple street, today faces the problem of caring for two children, Florence June, 7 years old, and Francis Eugene, 2 years old, as well as for paying for the house she and Francis Leavey built only last spring.

Had Plans for Today.

It was the admiring talk of the neighborhood the way Frank Leavey worked in his yard and at building his garage every minute of his spare time at home. Smooth, clodless expanses of yard were prepared by him this week for the blue grass he planned to plant today. His shoes still stand on the stair where he had them ready for his morning gardening.

Frank Frosh lived at home with his mother, Mrs. Catherine Frosh. Today Mrs. Frosh, 72 years old, who had not stirred from her home for two years until Friday night when she spent hours searching hospitals for her boy, is facing the problem of existence alone. There is on her little four roomed home at 2850 West Twenty-first place, a mortgage for $1,000. She has records of fourteen years of brave service her boy gave his city, and the prospect of empty years, with no one to care for her and support her.

Buries Four Children.

Within two years Mrs. Samuel T. Warren, 1331 South Kolin avenue, had buried four children. She is subject to heart disease, and last night was almost unable to talk, cared for by Jeanette, her 17 year old daughter, the only member of the family who is employed. Loretta, 15 years old, Geraldine, 12 years old, and Eileen, 6 years old, are still in school.

A frail wife and three little girls made expenses of every day life so large that Capt. John J. Brennan had postponed the expense of insurance premiums. Today Mrs. Brennan faces life with the necessity of supporting her little girls, Marie, 10 years old; Margaret, 6 years old, and Ruth, 18 months old.

Thomas Kelly Jr., 23 years old, a member at the police force of the Maxwell street police station, and his sister, Marguerite, 25 years old, will be able to feed and keep a roof over the head of their mother.

Brothers and sisters of Jeremiah Callahan, 1516 East 75th street, today are sending word to their mother in Ireland that her youngest son died fighting for his city's safety.

GYPSY MAGIC—RAW EGG TRICK COSTS JUST $445

Mary Tina Bimbo, a Gypsy queen, was arrested yesterday at the request of Edward Sinde, a printer living at 1124 North La Salle street. He claims that Queen Mary's daughter, with the assistance of her mother, nicked him for $445 on a promise of making him big and husky.

"The girl told my fortune and said I would be big and powerful if I wasn't so sick," Sinde said. "I didn't know there was anythng wrong with me, but they said they could restore me to health. To prove it they told me they'd take hair off my chest by touching my head with a raw egg. Then they put my $445 in a handkerchief with the egg, hit me on the dome, opened the egg and showed me some hair inside. But I didn't get any huskier."

PAUL REVERE (II.) HAS UP TO DATE LEXINGTON RIDE

Boston, Mass., April 19.—[Special.]—Paul Revere again clattered today along the streets of Boston and the outlying communities. Mounted on a spirited horse and starting from the house where the original Revere lived, he galloped through the streets of the old north end, through the Middlesex countryside to Lexington.

This time, luckily, he was not bearing a message of "up and to arms," but the patriotic message of commemoration intrusted to him was spread far more effectively than the more dread news borne by Paul Revere himself. For a squadron of airplanes circled over the route, and a radio broadcast from the Medford hillside station helped to distribute the tidings.

The event which was depicted is now 149 years distant. The rider wore a costume of that period, and followed the original route as nearly as possible. This rider was Sergt. Carroll F. Austin of the 110th cavalry, Massachusetts National Guard.

PADEREWSKIS' DOG, PING LUNG, 'ASCENDS DRAGON'

Ping Lung, who came from China to become the premier pet of the Paderewskis, "ascended the dragon" yesterday, as they say in the land of his birth. In short, he died.

The venerable Pekingese dog, age 15, breathed his last in the private car which rushed him to Chicago several days ago, when his gastritis became so serious that Ignace Jan Paderewski cancelled concert engagements to give Ping Lung the best medical treatment which the middle west affords.

The famous pianist and former premier of Poland, together with Mme. Paderewski, was at the cushion side as Ping Lung died.

ANYWAY, IT'LL BE EASTERLIKE INSIDE CHURCH

Music'll Make Good if Parade Fails.

BY GENEVIEVE FORBES.

Chicago is all prepared this Easter day to worship the Lord in the beauty of church shrine, sacred cantata, mission alms box, Lake Shore drive fashion show, and the weather man's teasing report.

But the fickle weather seems mistress of the entire day.

For it is she who can fill the pews, crowd the boulevard runways of the style pageant, get a big audience for the parades, and send crowds of spectators to the two suburban dedicatory exercises scheduled for today. Late last night, however, the weather man had refused to commit himself as to his conduct today.

There's a Bit of Hope.

One thing is certain, the weather will not put on the grand spectacle of ice and wind and snow staged so effectively in the Easter of 1920. And one thing is almost certain, that the day will not be too balmy, too serene, too soft, to make us forget that it is a Chicago Easter.

"Better park an umbrella somewhere in the park, if you intend to stroll down the avenue in a spring frock" is the advice of Weather Forecaster Donnel.

For the day is likely to combine the somberness of the Lenten season with the gayety of Easter, as far as temperature and rainfall are concerned.

Early Showers.

Early showers for today, predicted by Prof. Henry J. Cox, head of the weather bureau, are scheduled to be over by 7 o'clock this morning. This will leave a good three hours in which to woe back yesterday's rain soaked marcel before the church chimes urge less secular thoughts.

The temperature will vary today between 44 and 50 degrees, according to Prof. Cox.

A western disturbance, facing east, may interfere with the Easter lilies and eggs and hats in the Ohio valley, lower lake regions, and sections of the Atlantic states north of Virginia, the Washington, D. C., forecaster proclaimed last night.

But it will be Easter.

As symbolic of the day's ceremonies in honor of the risen Savior, special alleluia anthems will play an exultant part in the majority of the church services throughout the city.

The Jews will celebrate the passover. And those denominations whose faith excludes as a fact the resurrection of Christ, will pay religious tribute to significance of the day, as reawakening of nature's life.

WHEELER STOPS DAUGHERTY QUIZ TO DEFEND SELF

Indictment Mistake, View of Attorney General.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

Washington, D. C., April 19.—[Special.]—Senator B. K. Wheeler [Dem., Mont.] has temporarily abandoned his task of spring muck raking in the gardens of Washington and has lifted his head to receive the celestial crown of innocence from the hands of the Borah investigating committee next week.

Whether the Montana indictment of Senator Wheeler was inspired by Republican chiefs, aided by Harry M. Daugherty and W. J. Burns, forced through after eight ballots upon flimsy evidence for the purpose of terrorizing the hard hitting young senator in his committee work, or whether there was real justification for it, will probably be determined in a few days. The Borah committee will meet again Monday.

See New Issue in Indictment.

Democrats are predicting that it will prove a boomerang to the Republicans and form a new issue of "government by spies and political indictments."

Senator Wheeler was notified in his office this morning that the indictment from Montana, charging him with having used his office to further the interests of a client before a government department, had reached Washington and he was asked to appear and give bond before United States Commissioner MacDonald.

He went over to the District court building at once with his surety, W. B. Colver, former member of the federal trade commission, and gave bond of $10,000 to appear May 5 in Great Falls, Mont., for arraignment. This will be continued, he has been assured by the attorney general, to suit the senator's convenience.

Believes True Bill a Mistake.

Attorney General Stone, who was reported several days ago to have expressed the opinion that the indictment was justified, now is said to have told friends that the indictment was a great mistake. "The evidence for the prosecution," however, has not all been heard and Washington is withholding judgment. A blast of "gossip," "hearsay," and "lies," the kind of evidence that has been charged against the Brookhart committee, is said to be in store for Senator Wheeler next week.

The defense will try to get out before the Borah committee that Blair Coan, an investigator for George Lockwood of the Republican national committee organization, went out to Montana several weeks ago and hunted up Wheeler's political enemies and told them he was going to "get" Wheeler, that he must be indicted, anyway.

Coan to Testify.

Mr. Coan is in Washington and is due to go on the witness stand. An effort will be made to substantiate this story through Republican party chiefs in Montana. Senator Borah, however, has shown no disposition to go into any phase of the case, except the actual evidence against Wheeler, holding that all else is immaterial. If this evidence fails as completely as is predicted by Senator Wheeler, the Idaho senator may swing into the political department of justice plot that is said to be behind the indictment.

Senator Smith W. Brookhart [Rep. Insurgent, Iowa], has been informed that investigators are out in Iowa trying to find something against him. He is going right ahead with his committee work next week. The contempt papers against Mal S. Daugherty and Howard Mannington were ready today to go before the senate, but Senator Brookhart has his own ideas about the charges to be made against these unwilling witnesses and ordered the papers rewritten.

Gillett to Appear Tomorrow.

Frederick H. Gillet, speaker of the house of representatives, who was named in the liquor scandal, before the Brookhart committee Friday, has asked to appear before this committee on Monday. Senator Brookhart has determined to go into the liquor situation thoroughly, particularly in view of the quietus that has been put on the proposed internal revenue department investigation, and will summon witnesses in the "bunch case" in Washington early in the week. Chicago angles developed through the testimony of Brice F. Armstrong and Hinton G. Clabaugh may also be followed. Homer K. Galpin is expected to appear as a witness.

Attorney General Stone has placed a special "observer" at the Brookhart committee hearings and is looking around for special prosecutors in several suits which have been developed in the testimony there.

Alien Property Enters Case.

The testimony of George W. Storck in the Philippine alien property fraud cases is being particularly looked into, and the department of justice is expected to institute several suits to protect the interests of the Germans who sold out under pressure to friends of former Governor General Francis Burton Harrison.

In addition to these cases, the department of justice will move after the "Old Hickory" Powder company claims, estimated anywhere from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000; the Bosch Magneto claim of $450,000, paid by the government for property which was never received; the Wright-Martin aircraft fraud claim of $5,000,000, and the protection of the Indian wards in the Miller land case of Oklahoma. In all these cases the department of justice under H. M. Daugherty failed to prosecute. In the Bosch Magneto case a Washington grand jury reported that a conspiracy existed in the sale of this property but that prosecution could not be started in this district. The government may sue here as trustee for the former German stockholders, said to have been defrauded out of $4,000,000.

INVESTIGATING THE SENATE'S INVESTIGATOR

RADIO MEN IN ORGANIZATION TO FIGHT TAX PLAN

Chicago is the headquarters of the strongest radio trades organization in the industry. Announcement of its formation under the incorporated name of Associated Radio Manufacturers was made yesterday. More than twenty concerns making radio apparatus are included in the membership.

The association's immediate object is to defeat the efforts of some congressmen to put a 10 per cent tax on radio products, on the grounds that radio is an infant industry and that its fundamental purpose is educational.

A temporary board of five directors, composed of Herbert H. Frost, A. A. Howard, A. J. Carter, Frank Reichman, and E. N. Rauland, will serve for ninety days. Then officers and a complete board of nine members will be elected.

Collide; Fight; Hot Tamale Vendor Shot; Later Dies

Michael Badigian, a hot tamale vender, who lived at 670 North Clark street, died at the county hospital yesterday of a wound received Wednesday in a fight with Frank Esposito, head of a labor agency at 716 West Madison street. Their automobiles collided and Esposito used his revolver in the quarrel which followed.

'TISN'T BOBBED HAIR BUT ETHICS THAT'S HORRIBLE

It isn't the bobbed hair, but the bobbing of the hair that's all wrong, according to Miss Mary Wheeler, superintendent of the Illinois Training School for Nurses, which recently expelled four student nurses until their locks should grow long.

In speaking of the expulsion of Jean Robinson, Fern Maloney, Myrtle Ford, and May Albert, Miss Wheeler admitted that bobbed hair didn't quite coincide with her portrait of a neat, efficient nurse.

"But the main difficulty," Miss Wheeler explained, "is that in having their hair cut short, the girls violated the student code."

Retired Broker's House Is Looted by Thieves

Police have been searching for three days, it became known yesterday, for two well dressed men who took silverware, jewelry, an oil painting, and a tapestry valued in all at about $9,000 from the home of Patrick J. King, a retired real estate broker, living at 1340 Arthur street. The robbers forced the lock of the front door Wednesday afternoon, while the King family was out, and escaped with the loot without being seen. Two men had been lurking about the place in an automobile for several days.

specifically the Sinclair Oil company and the Standard Oil company.

It was further charged that persons said to have been responsible for having the treaty passed, "received $5,000,000 of the $15,000,000 already paid to Colombia by the United States" under the terms of the past. The treaty provides that America pay Colombia $25,000,000 to assuage its feelings for the loss of the Panama canal zone during the Roosevelt administration. Dr. Olaya, minister to the United States from Colombia, said last night in Washington that Colombia has received only $10,000,000 to date.

The Wilson administration originally submitted the Colombian treaty to the senate in 1914. At that time most of the Republican senators opposed the pact and prominent among them was Albert B. Fall, then a senator and later secretary of the interior in the Harding cabinet.

Harding Urges Ratification.

Five days after he took office, President Harding proposed ratification of the treaty which the late Theodore Roosevelt denounced as "international blackmail."

In a widely quoted letter to Senator Lodge in 1921, Fall explained why he had reversed his position and was supporting the Colombian pact. He asserted Great Britain was fast gaining control of all the oil fields in the western hemisphere outside of the United States and if America wanted to protect its interests it must act at once. Fall said the United States should seek oil rights in Colombia but in view of the prejudice against it there it should ratify the $25,000,000 treaty to create a friendly feeling.

LOSS OF GRANT PARK PARKING HITS MOTORISTS

Chicago motorists continued to wail yesterday over the loss of free parking space in Grant park, to be abolished May 1 by order of the South Park board.

But the protests were not as vigorously backed by automobile organizations as has been expected.

Hugo Meyer, manager of the Illinois Automobile club, announced that he plans a thorough investigation of all angles of the Grant park situation before taking definite club action.

Officials of the Chicago Motor club announced that their board must consider the matter before taking action.

Takes Two Boys a Day to Spend 950,000 Marks

Detectives arrived just in time yesterday to halt negotiations for a bicycle which Joseph Stemenowski and Walter Buskowski, 14 and 15 years old, respectively, hoped to purchase for 50,000 German marks. This sum was the balance of 1,000,000 marks stolen earlier in the day from the home of John Dooble, 643 Asbury avenue, Evanston. The rest had been traded for an assortment of roller skates, knives, and other juvenile possessions in the neighborhood. They were taken to the Detention home.

Second and Third Class Voyage May Become Vogue

New York, April 19.—Capt. Felix Murass of the French liner Paris, arriving today, announced the discovery of a new method for disposing of liquors in excess of the medicinal allotment which his vessel had brought to the twelve mile limit.

Instead of dumping it to the fish, as has been the practice, he stood treat to all the second and third class passengers. Thus, according to Capt. Murass, he disposed of 500 liters of wine, cordials and beer last midnight.

The first automobile party to take formaldehyde spray shower bath d steam treatment for clothes, auto bile, and baggage was composed of bert Wiseman, two other adults, and ven children, from Oklahoma City. Wiseman stated he had been strand for eight days and that he and the her members of the party in the des t had gone through five fumigations ce leaving southern California. A. E. Pellew of 1224 H street, Wash gton, D. C., and his wife were the xt to undergo the fumigating and sinfecting process.

Held in Desert a Week.

They had been held up at the desert ockade line for exactly a week and s. Pellew stated she had been un le to change her clothing during that e.

To relieve the suffering of the anded tourists a large supply of d, blankets and tents have been t to Knob's Siding by business men Yuma. The first tourists who ssed the line into the state late this ternoon heartily praised the efforts the Yuma emergency committee in eir behalf.

Once the blockade is established, au orities here said, not a soul will be rmitted to cross the state line. Col. arles W. Harris, with eight national ardsmen and a machine gun, is pa olling the line, assisted by a large uad of special officers and deputy riffs.

Both States Are Angry.

Despite Gov. Hunt's capitulation to iege of the tourists at the state by temporarily lifting the block the feeling between Imperial ty law officials and Arizona au rities is growing more tense hourly. ge supply of rifles, sawedoff shot s and ammunition has been sent to riff Gillette, who is in charge of California side of the situation, at nter Haven, near the end of the ma bridge.

The arms were hurried to the sheriff er he had wired his office at El tro that members of the Arizona e militia were threatening to cross the California side and blockade the ds opened up yesterday by officials Imperial county.

Sheriff Gillette declared that he in ds to "defend Imperial county from vasion by any armed soldiers or idents of Arizona and that he had l police power to keep California ds open in the face of the Arizona foot and mouth blockade."

Col. Harris, adjutant general of Arizona, sent word to the sheriff this evening denying that he had threatened or had intended to send his men across to the California side to reëstablish the highway blockade.

L. L. Odle, superintendent of the Fort Yuma Indian reservation, has also taken a hand in the controversy and has sent a wire to Washington protesting against the action of California in lifting the blockade on the Yuma road across the Indian reservation. He declared that this action constituted a violation of the federal quarantine.

Many Privations Suffered.

Tales of privations akin to those of the covered wagon days of yore were told in the tourists' camp on the California side. One baby was born in the camp during the siege and among those granted special entry from the camp into Arizona due to ill health was Mrs. F. W. McKenzie of New York, who is now in the Yuma county hospital.

Intense heat, without shelter during the day and severe cold, without sufficient covering during the night, lack of food, and dearth of funds were among the result of the eight day siege among the border besiegers. Yuma citizens had organized relief and sent sufficient food supplies across the line.

Scolds California Executive.

Phoenix, Ariz., April 19.—Action of authorities of Imperial county, California, in giving "illegal and violent advice and leadership" to autoists who stormed the Arizona blockade at Yuma last night was vigorously protested today by Gov. Hunt in a message to Gov. Richardson of California. His message follows:

"I am advised that last night under the leadership and advice of officers of Imperial county, California, tourists who traveled toward Arizona in spite of notice of quarantine regulations and violated federal quarantine regulations on the Yuma Indian reservation attempted to storm the bridge across the Colorado river at Yuma and that several shots were fired from the California side.

"I protest vigorously against this illegal and violent advice and leadership of officials of Imperial county. The Arizona national guard will be posted on the Arizona border to enforce the quarantine regulations and I look to you to maintain order and law in California."

U. S. Experts on the Job.

Washington, D. C., April 19.—Quarantine measures of the federal government to prevent spread of the foot and mouth disease among cattle in California and adjoining states are ample to meet the present situation there and to protect the interests of all concerned, Secretary Wallace declared today.

"In suppressing the outbreak in California, federal and state authorities have slaughtered 350 herds of cattle, leaving eighteen herds and one exposed herd still to be destroyed, John R. Mohler, chief of the bureau of animal industry reported. The disease, he added, appeared to be under good control in the following counties: Alameda, Contra Costa, Solano, San Francisco, San Joaquin, and Kern. The situation remains serious in Merced and Los Angeles counties, wihch progress being made for control.

Livestock sacrificed thus far as a safeguard include approximately 23,000 cattle, 13,000 sheep, 10,000 swine, and 300 goats. These animals, aggregating nearly 50,000, are now under ground, having been buried in quick lime and covered with at least five feet of earth.

LIFE TERM FOR SLAYING SPITE FENCE BUILDER

Erection of a "spite" fence led James St. Lucia, 44, of Melrose Park, to shoot his neighbor, Vincenzo Fialto, and yesterday caused a jury trying St. Lucia for murder before Circuit Judge George Fred Rush to convict him and sentence him to life imprisonment.

Fialto was the one who built the fence, the testimony showed, and he encroached on St. Lucia's property a few inches. It was built as high as possible, the jury was told, Fialto even using old window shades to shut out the sunlight from St. Lucia's home.

The shooting occurred on April 28, 1923, while Fialto was working on the fence.

THREAT OF HOOF GERM SWIFTLY ATTACKED HERE

Drastic Move Taken in Stockyards.

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

Federal authorities took drastic steps to head off what they believed to be the possible germ of foot and mouth disease at the Union stockyards yesterday. Two carloads of cattle, excepting three calves, shipped here from Kansas City, were slaughtered and immediately dumped into sealed tanks, where they were cooked in live steam for four hours. The prompt action is believed to have checked any possible danger.

Rumors spread to every office and pen in the stockyards early in the morning when federal inspectors discovered a sick calf in the shipment of cattle soon after they had been unloaded. The cattle were consigned to the Northwestern Live Stock Commission company.

Recall Previous Epidemic.

California's trouble with foot and mouth disease among cattle and hogs which the live stock interests throughout the country have been eyeing for several weeks caused stockyards people to become alarmed. They recalled the experience and losses suffered in the middle west in 1914 and 1915 from this dreaded disease. Commission men and Packingtown employés remember how animal graves had to be dug with steam shovels and as many as 600 infected cattle were shot and piled into a single hole. In those two epidemics the foot and mouth disease spread to fifty-one counties in Illinois alone.

That is the reason that federal veterinary inspectors bounced onto the two carloads of knotty headed canners soon after they came down the unloading chutes. A cordon of guards was immediately placed around the entire shipment of cattle and they were held in the receiving pens under strict quarantine until they were reloaded in the afternoon and hauled over the safest route to a packing plant, where they were slaughtered. The cooked material is used for fertilizer purposes and is never sold for food.

Hogs Also Slaughtered.

While investigation has not been carried far enough to determine the origin of the cattle, it is feared that some of the animals came from the ranges of southwestern states on the fringe of the infected area along the Pacific coast.

A shipment of hogs that were exposed to the suspicious cattle were immediately slaughtered under rigid federal supervision.

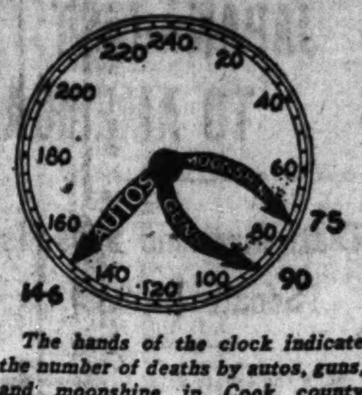
The suspicious calf with a warty nose and what veterinarians technally call a "diphtheric membrane" around the mouth, was placed with two other calves from the same shipment and held for further inspection. The trio of suspects were hauled in a "cripple cart" and placed in a small pest house in a large vacant space just outside the yards. They will be held under federal quarantine until veterinarians can make tests to determine whether the calf has foot and mouth disease or not. Two other healthy calves taken from the stockyards will be used in the experiments. Samples of the infected calf's lesions have also been sent to the federal laboratories at Washington. Capital officials were at once notified.

Disinfect Runways and Pens.

Further precaution was taken by burning every fragment of straw and manure in the runways and pens where the cattle walked. Every spot of ground and fences that might have been touched by the cattle has been thoroughly disinfected as a safeguard measure.

The government will pay for the animals destroyed.

HANDS OF DEATH



The hands of the clock indicate the number of deaths by autos, guns, and moonshine in Cook county since Jan. 1 last.

WHAT THE HOOF AND MOUTH DISEASE IS; HUMANS CAN CATCH IT

Washington, D. C., April 19.—The dreaded hoof and mouth disease, which is ravaging live stock in certain sections of California, is a highly communicable malady which, when contracted by cattle, necessitates their immediate slaughter, according to the department of agriculture.

First symptoms of the disease are the appearance of small vescicles around the mouth and hoofs of animals and an extremely high fever. Animals afflicted refuse food and rapidly lose weight as the vescicles develop into ulcers and sores. The malady is fatal.

While the disease is extraordinarily contagious among animals, humans are rarely known to catch it. In cases where it has appeared it has been in a mild form. Babies and children are most susceptible, but even among them it is not dangerous.

The reason for an embargo against vehicular traffic from infected districts is the suspicion that mud or dust on the vehicles may carry the germs.

TWO MEN AND BOY DIE, VICTIMS OF AUTOMISHAPS

A boy, a policeman and an aged man died yesterday as the result of automobile accidents, and two other persons received injuries which may prove fatal.

Patrolman Daniel Donovan of the Englewood station died at his home, 5519 South Winchester avenue, after being struck by a machine at Robey and 55th streets. Police are trying to learn who drove the automobile.

Eight year old Joseph Sevick, 969 West 19th street, died from injuries received on Friday evening when a car driven by Charles Kinerin of 2604 West 55th street hit him as he was crossing 22d street near Peoria street.

Charles Gillespie, 72 years old, 2412 Cottage Grove avenue, was killed in an automobile accident last night at East Twenty-fourth street and Prairie avenue. The police, unable to decide by which of two automobiles Gillespie was hit, are holding two drivers. They are William Ward, 4141 South Stone street, La Grange, and Charles Koch, Kibbie, Mich.

A skidding mail truck struck down Lorance J. Bauer of 517 South Oak Park avenue, Oak Park, at Madison street and East avenue in the western suburb. His skull was fractured.

Miss Irene Bean, 28 years old, 3347 South Western avenue, received a similar injury when an automobile hit her as she alighted from a street car at 9th street and Wabash avenue to attend vesper services at St. Mary's church. The driver, Alvin D. Kuhns of 1514 East 72d street, surrendered to the police.

SCHOOL BOARD MAY DROP 100 UNION EMPLOYES

John E. Byrnes, business manager of the school board, is preparing to meet union officials tomorrow to find out why he should not save the city about $226,000 by dropping some 100 union employés and letting out the work they do to contractors. The officials have been opposing this contemplated action.

"While I am ready to listen to anything reasonable, the labor unions are not running the board of education," Mr. Byrnes said.

"The union heads will have to convince me that I can get increased efficiency and greater loyalty before I will listen to their demands."

CROWDS CHEER AS DOUG AND MARY ARRIVE IN LONDON

Movie Stars Will Hobnob with Europe's Kings.

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, April 19.—Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, American movie favorites, arrived in London this afternoon as bright and shining celebrities among the 1,500 Americans who landed at Southampton this morning. Cheering crowds held in check by the police gave the pair great receptions both at Southampton and here in London, the newspapers donating "Our Mary" a comfortable portion of their front pages.

The movie sovereigns will be the guests of Lord Louis Mountbatten, cousin of King George, and their present engagements include balls, receptions, and dinners in their honor to be given in the next fortnight by the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, Sir James Barrie, the London post of the American Legion, and others.

They are also "commanded" to appear before the king and queen of the Belgians next month and a similar command has been received from the court of Sweden for later in the season.

Mary Pickford said the first thing she would do in England would be to go down to Haddon Hall and "see how many mistakes I made when I built a replica of it out in Hollywood."

Then, laughing, she added:

"We are going to Moscow to present the premiere of Doug's picture, 'The Forty Thieves of Bagdad.'"

One mob of English reporters asked if Doug was going to be on hand to rescue Mary from the bolsheviks in case she needed him.

"He'd better rescue me, or the people would never believe him in the films," Mary exclaimed.

Today's liners brought the biggest group of Americans yet this year, and the London association stated that 250,000 tourists were expected to visit England before October.

OFFICIAL JAPAN REMAINS CALM; PRESS INDIGNANT

Further Exclusion Action Awaited.

BY RODERICK MATHESON.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

TOKIO, April 19.—The official Japanese attitude continues calm as the nation discusses the Japanese exclusion acts adopted by the American congress. The spokesman of the privy council says that body will not attack Premier Kiyoura for his failure to take action regarding the situation.

"Until final action is taken by America it will be unwise to take precipitate steps," he said.

The danger now is that the opposition may seize the matter for political capital in the national campaign which is now progressing. There are indications already that the opposition leaders plan to arouse popular indignation over the exclusion clause, placing the blame for it on the government.

"Japan Will Not Submit."

Discussing the situation, the Nichi Nichi says:

"President Coolidge may sign the bill. If so and the law is enforced Japan will not submit. We must demand a reversal by all means, lest the relations become more straitened, leading to 'grave consequences.'"

The Miyako says the act is a redhot insult and the Americans "are apt to forget it is possible the fault is on their side. Japanese residing in America under protection of the administration ought to endeavor to be loyal to the local authorities."

Press View from Osaka.

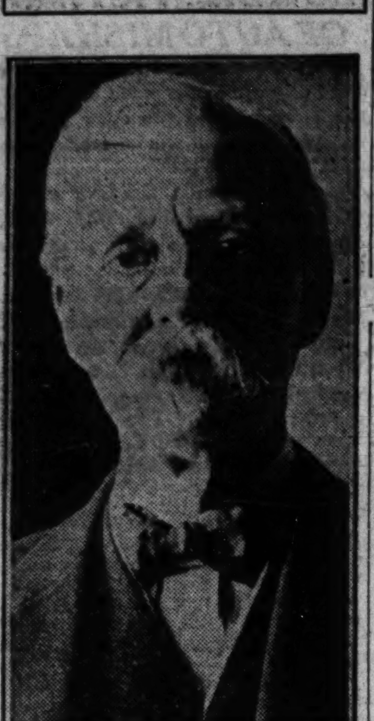
[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

OSAKA, Japan, April 19.—Mainichi, the most widely circulated daily of this city, commenting editorially on the outrageous act of the United States," says:

"The senate of the United States threw international comity to the winds and utterly disregarded traditional friendship ideals establishing world peace."

The paper believes perhaps the senate "thought the present the best opportunity for such action, as Japan is greatly afflicted as a result of the earthquake.

DEFENDS SENATE



This is Senator Albert B. Cummins of Iowa, president of the United States senate. In an interview he says the action of the senate on the immigration bill contained no animosity against Japan.

FRIENDLY TO JAPAN—JUST TO AMERICA

That, Cummins Says, Is Senate Attitude.

Why the senate voted to exclude the Japanese was told yesterday by Senator Albert B. Cummins of Iowa, president of the United States senate.

The senator said it was because he and his colleagues came to the conclusion they stood at the crossroads—that the time has come when the United States ought not to admit any man who may not ultimately become a citizen.

He added also that the so-called 'gentleman's agreement" of 1911 or thereabouts had ceased to be fair either to Japan or to the United States, that the time had come when it must be abrogated.

Senator Cummins came to Chicago during the day to talk with friends from Des Moines about the postoffice situation in the Iowa capital. He left again for Washington at 6 o'clock in the evening.

Animosity Absent.

"There was not a spark of animosity to Japan or to the Japanese people about it," Senator Cummins said. "During all the speeches in the senate—and I believe I heard most all of them—I did not hear one unfriendly word.

"It is simply time that we ought not to let in immigrants or men of an alien race who can never become citizens. We cannot assimilate the yellow man; therefore it is an economic necessity that we exclude him. I believe that was the thought of all the senators in voting the way they did."

Nor did the senators think their action would bring serious international complications. There might be considerable irritation, Senator Cummins said, but no war either now or ultimately over this question, no breaking off of diplomatic relations.

"We considered it serious," he continued, "but not so serious as that. Well, it was simply asserting a general principle that I think everybody must acknowledge.

Kept Their Agreement.

"Take under the so-called 'gentleman's agreement'—in passing I want to say that we all admit that Japan kept the faith in that as best she could. But that left the question of deciding who should be admitted up to Japan when it should be up to the United States.

"And further: Under that agreement Japan was not to send any labor into this country. She did her best and, in fact, in general succeeded. But that didn't make any difference. The Japanese mode of living is so different from ours that our people can't compete with them; and that is rather a compliment than a slur to the Japanese.

"In a great republic no man should be admitted who can't take part in the government by and of the people. If a man is not a citizen he can't exercise any voice in the government. And you can't keep a people contented and happy under such conditions . .

"We maintained for 100 years that only the Caucasian race be admitted to the franchise. We changed that after the civil war, when we allowed the blacks to become enfranchised. So now it is a man must be either white or black—and we have no black immigrants."

Praises Coolidge Record.

On politics and on the national scandals, Senator Cummins had this to say:

"We are in the midst of difficult times, but we must not take things too seriously. In any country where they have a great many public officials, as we have here, some of them are bound to go wrong, bound to do unsavory things, to fail to live up to their trust. It is necessary at times to have a cleaning out, and this happens to be one of those times.

"As for politics, I am not so much of a politician and don't know much say. Only this, that I think President Coolidge has been an outstanding figure since he went into office. I think he has conducted himself with splendid courage and judgment and I am quite sure he has the confidence of the great mass of the people.

erably strengthened by the Washington conference as well as by the most magnanimous sympathy shown by your people in the recent calamity in my country. Whereas there is otherwise every promise of hearty coöperation between Japan and the United States, which is believed to be essential to the welfare not only of themselves, but of the rest of the world, it would create, or at least, tend to create, an unhappy atmosphere of ill-feeling and misgiving over the relations between our two countries.

"As the representative of my country, whose supreme duty is to maintain and if possible to draw still closer the bond of friendship so happily existing between our two peoples I honestly believe such effects, as I have described, to be 'grave consequences.'

No Thought of Veiled Threat.

"In using these words, which I did quite ingeniously, I had no thought of being in any way disagreeable or discourteous, and still less of conveying 'a veiled threat.' On the contrary it was in a spirit of the most sincere respect, confidence, and candor that I used these words, which spirit I hope is manifest throughout my entire letter, for it was in that spirit that I wrote you.

"I never suspected that these words, used as I used them, would ever afford an occasion for such comment or interpretation as have been given them.

"You know, I am sure, that nothing could be further from my thought than to give cause for offence to your people or their government, and I have not the slightest doubt that you have no such misunderstanding as to either the spirit in which I wrote the letter in question to you or the meaning I intended for the phrase that I used therein.

"In view, however, of what has transpired in the course of the public discussion in the senate, I feel constrained to write you, as a matter of record, that I did not use the phrase in question in such a sense as has been attributed to it."

Mr. Hughes' Reply.

To this Mr. Hughes replied:

"I am gratified to receive your letter of the seventeenth instant with your frank and friendly explanation of the intent of your recent note in relation to the pending immigration bill. It gives me pleasure to be able to assure you that reading the words 'grave consequences' in the light of their context, and knowing the spirit of friendship and understanding you have always manifested in our long association, I had no doubt that these words were to be taken in the sense you have stated, and I was quite sure that it was far from your thought to express or imply any threat. I am happy to add that I have deeply appreciated your constant desire to promote the most cordial relations between the peoples of the two countries."

Follows Conference Between Two.

It became known here today that Ambassador Hanihara and Secretary Hughes had a full discussion of the "grave consequences" incident last Thursday, when the ambassador called at the state department. At that time, it is understood, the ambassador expressed himself in much the same fashion as in the letter made public today, explaining that the phrase was intended to be construed with the language which followed, and that no threat of any kind had been thought of.

Mr. Hughes, it is understood, likewise stated that he never had imagined for a moment that a threat was intended. Ambassador Hanihara then is understood to have announced his intention of setting forth the truth of the matter in another letter to Mr. Hughes, and the letter was later sent to the secretary, subject to authorization from Tokio to make it public. When Tokio had given its approval, the state department made the text public, along with the reply of Mr. Hughes.

CHEER VOW TO DIE—BUT NEVER TO DEFEND U. S.

Lexington Day Is Signal for Pacifist Climax.

BULLETIN.

Louisville, Ky., April 19.—"Any self-styled patriotic organization which thrives upon or seeks to propagate race, creed, or class prejudice" constitutes a "real peril to the establishment of the 'good will ideal' among men," was the sentiment of the national conference of Methodist students expressed in a resolution adopted at tonight's session.

BY JOHN HERRICK.

Louisville, Ky., April 19.—[Special.]—On the one hundred and forty-eighth anniversary of the battle of Lexington 500 Methodist men and women students, gathered here in convention, today applauded the doctrine of pacifism.

On the eve of the anniversary of the resurrection of Jesus Christ this half thousand cheered two of their number when they declared they would rather suffer martyrdom, death itself, than break what they held to be their Savior's teachings in order to take up arms for their country.

Evanston's "38" Carry Day.

The Thirty-eight of Evanston had their way, if the response to their message was a token. There was no vote, but the rafters of their church meeting house echoed to the voices when Howard Becker of Northwestern university and Thomas Harrison of Boston university declared in turn:

"If setting my name to a pledge to defend the constitution meant that I must shoulder arms with which to shoot my fellow man, I could not sign. If it meant offering up my life, that would be a different thing," and—

"I would go to Leavenworth before I would use the methods of the last war. If war comes, even comes to these shores, I believe the methods of Jesus Christ would be the best."

Less Cheering for Major.

One and a half times as much cheering for these two, the listener would have said, as for Maj. Robert A. Adams, national advocate of the American Legion, when he declared that "there has crept into our schools and colleges a pacifistic doctrine dangerous to the present and fraught with terrible possibilities for the future."

"There has been much hasty and ill considered thought, and more hasty and ill considered talk," Maj. Adams said, and labeled certain pacifist preachings "revolutionary rantings." "Peace is the great aim of us all, but unfortunately there is too often a failure to distinguish between peace and pacifism. There are none more zealous for peace than the ex-service man.

Despises Bergdolls, Allinsons.

"Every pledge not to defend the nation makes possible the furtherance of the methods of internationalists in soviet Russia, who I firmly believe are attempting to break down this government. The Bergdolls and the Allinsons are the most to be despised. A country worth living for is worth dying for."

But the majority wanted to hear more from the speakers from their own ranks.

"The king is dead. Long live the king," young Becker gave as his text.

They are eloquent speakers, these students of the Sermon on the Mount. Their doctrines burst forcefully from their lips. They stand on their feet and preach with the audacity of sincerity.

"Youth is hearing a new melody out of the discord which follows the disillusionment of the war," spoke the Northwestern undergraduate.

"In the past we have worshiped national gods. The great universal God has been divided by boundary lines. The conflict of loyalties is a terrible one. But we know how the old system worked in Europe. Christ was again crucified.

"Let us have not only a league of nations, but a league of youth, youths who will not fight each other whenever their elders say so, who will definitely renounce all thought of war. War is a more blatant denial of Christ than any atheism."

"One can use force if it is done in a spirit of love, as Christ meant love," declared Harrison, in whose buttonhole shone the badge of the American Legion. "One can use force to punish a child, to restrain the insane in mind or morals. But who would make such charges against a whole people? If you cannot believe in a whole race you have not Jesus' faith in human nature."

Heckler Taught Courtesy.

It was Harrison of Northwestern who warned the meeting to treat the proponents of preparedness with courtesy, after a tense moment when Walter Mueller, one of the Evanston delegation, questioned Maj. Adams about his statements in regard to Allinson, the notorious conscientious objector.

Dr. Jesse Holmes, professor of philosophy at Swarthmore university and member of the Society of Friends, took the final burst of approbation.

"A nation," he said, "deserves loyalty only insofar as it serves your religion."

"You can love all people, but you do not necessarily have to like them," Dr. Holmes smoothed out some of the quibbling points. "Our love for people today is bounded by lines, race lines, English speaking lines, lines of nationality.

"In the days of the sword it was the most unfit who were killed. Today it is the best.

"If what we are after is an English speaking nation or some other kind of nation, the system of preparedness will work. If what we are after is a generally friendly world, then Christ's method alone will work."

Resolutions against war, chief among which was that of Ruth E. Burchell of Northwestern, followed the speeches, but action was reserved.

Race was the morning topic, and the delegates called on America to welcome all nations as brothers. No prejudices, no racial hatreds, no color lines can be drawn by the true Christian, said the speakers.

American capitalists and American movies have given other nations a bad opinion of the United States, asserted Paul Hutchinson, managing editor of the Christian Century of Chicago.

Industry was held up to the yardstick of Christianity and found wanting. Resolutions were adopted urging the right of collective bargaining, abolition of child labor, and the end of "rule by injunction."

Film Star Rushed to Hospital

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.

Condition Is Serious

Fort Wayne, Ind., April 19.—Miss Clara Kimball Young, actress, who collapsed while on the stage in a local theater Tuesday night, was secretly rushed to a local hospital early tonight and operated on. Her condition, it is understood, is extremely dangerous.

Miss Young was removed from the operating room at 10:35 still under the influence of the anesthetic. The surgeons said it would be early morning before she fully regained consciousness and that no statement of her condition would be given out until that time.

It was revealed that Miss Young was suffering from an abdominal tumor.

JAPS COME HERE AS COOLIES; SOON OWNERS OF LAND

Their Toil Turns Barren Lands Into Gardens.

BY EDWARD DOHERTY.

ARTICLE III.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 19.—[Special.]—The Japanese have been in California some fifty years, and for fifty years they have been aliens in a strange land, banding together, colonizing, growing in numbers and in wealth.

There came first students, business men, wealthy tourists. Then came others—coolies, laborers. They came by the hundreds, by the thousands.

An Asiatic horde spilling into the riches of the newest land in the newest nation in the world, called by the white and brown "labor contractors" who put them to work at a few pennies a day.

Came by Invitation.

America had invited them. America had said to Japan, "Open your doors; send us your students, your professors, your doctors, your citizens of all kind; come and see America. Learn our ideals, study our inventions. Take home our plows, our reaping machines, our sewing machines, our phonographs, our soaps, and our cereals. Trade with us. You'll find our goods are the best in the world. How have you done without them for so long?"

The coolies came. They hired out as servants that they might learn the English language. They hired out in battalions as tillers of the soil. They picked and crated citrus fruit, apricots, vegetables. They helped dig irrigation ditches. They helped to build railroads.

They received but a few cents a day and yet they thrived on it. And presently they banded together and leased some lands of their own. As the years went by their holdings increased. It was impossible for white men to hire Japanese hands. They were all working for Japanese, or farming on shares, or going into business for themselves.

Too Keen for White Farmers.

White farmers failed. The competition was too keen. White men couldn't work so hard as the Japanese; white men couldn't hire such cheap labor. The Japs smiled and bought up the lands of the white farmers. And their acres swelled and yielded more crops and with the money that came to them they bought more acres, and yet more. And they were hiring white men to work for them.

And then the gentlemen's agreement was asked and given. There would be no more cheap labor imported into the smiling California valleys to help the Japanese in their peaceful conquest. But the Japs were lonesome. They began to feel the need of their wives, who had been left in old Japan. They were allowed to send for them; they looked at pictures of pretty Japanese ladies, picked the bride from the picture, and sent the message to come to America.

Race Suicide Unknown.

Children were born in all the little shacks that dotted the green valleys. Little brown children who played in the fields and laughed at the white-topped purple mountains. Little boys and girls who learned early how to handle American hoes and drive American plows and seeders and cultivators.

Whole shiploads of picture brides came to join the husbands they had never seen and raise up children to them. The Japanese colonies in California took on new life. The Japanese had learned American ways, American methods. The colonists owned miles and miles of the finest land in the world. One could drive a team all day through happy fields and see no one but Japanese. Japanese men, Japanese women, Japanese children, toiling from dawn to dark.

Defy Heat and Hostility.

"Little brown brother," he says. "Little brown brother, hell; more like a brother-in-law." The Japanese spread out. They came to Los Angeles. They went into the Imperial valley. Nothing could stop them. Neither the intense heat, the barrenness of the ground, the rocks, the sand, the white man's hostility. Prices were raised on them. Land that was offered to white men at a dollar an acre was sold to the Japanese at anywhere from $10 to $30. The Japanese bought at any price; it made no difference what the country looked like. They went to work and soon they were sending their fruits and vegetables from the sand and rocks to all the cities of the east.

Japanese Heaviest Shippers.

The Japanese shipped 80 per cent of the cantaloupes, 60 per cent of the watermelons, 99 per cent of the tomatoes, all the onions, 10 per cent of the grapes, 85 per cent of the peas, 95 per cent of the strawberries, 35 per cent of the lettuce, and 1 per cent of the grapefruit. There are less than 150,000 Japanese in the entire United States a ridiculous number when compared with the 120,000,000 who are citizens of the country. And yet, within half a century they have gradually acquired a great part of one of the richest states in the republic, a feat no other race has accomplished.

There will be no tremendous exodus if the exclusion law is passed. Two members of the colony here have already gone to Omaha, where 500 acres have been offered them. A few others have started to Florida. There is a colony in Texas.

"They must have us," say the Jap leaders. "The chamber of commerce has kept Los Angeles the white spot on the map of prosperity. But we, the Japanese, have kept all California green."

Give Those "Side Line" Undertakers Credit

A recent newspaper article told about a fruit vender, three street car men, four carpenters, a tinsmith and a score of chauffeurs who operate undertaking as a side line to their daily work.

A large army of other one-funeral-a-month undertakers, NOT SO HONEST, compel their few clients to support them in idleness by robbing their patrons of profits ranging up to 400 per cent.

No wonder the Skeeles-Biddle organization, with its THREE superb memorial chapels and scores of funerals each month, finds it so easy to save its clients from $50.00 to $500.00 or more on the cost of caskets alone.

A PEOPLE'S ISSUE.

In the days when kings by divine right or their ministers ruled the nations, wars were often the result of dynastic quarrels or competitions. Monarchs, oligarchs, or aristocratic governments did not hesitate to plunge nations into the miseries of warfare for the sake of seizing a few miles of territory or a walled city or of humiliating a rival prince or potentate. With the growth of popular government wars of pride and aristocratic privilege have virtually passed away, but not war itself. When war is threatened nowadays it is not for the whim of a prince but because nations have come into conflict over some interest, political or economic, which cannot be compromised peacefully. Republics have always made wars upon sufficient provocation and will until the lion and the lamb lie down together.

The present unfortunate crisis in the relations of Japan and the United States, we believe, will be settled without serious trouble. But if a conflict should ever come on the immigration issue it would offer contrast to the dynastic duel of the monarchs, since it would be for the interest of all the people. Pacifists talk as if all wars were made by remorseless money makers, a theory which breaks down under examination, and if there were a conflict over exclusion, no better illustration could be found of the part played in the modern democratic world by the interests of the people.

Employers of labor, moneyed interests accused by radicals of considering only their own pocketbooks, business which profits by foreign trade or by the rapid development of any region, all might welcome unlimited immigration of thrifty workers able to underbid occidentals in the labor market. But the American workman who cannot compete with the Japanese without giving up his standard of living can have only one opinion on the issue of exclusion.

If so deplorable a consequence as armed conflict with Japan should ever arrive, it would be a conflict primarily in the interest of the American worker, a democratic conflict, a people's conflict without qualification. Offended pride may be the source of Japanese action; but on the side of the American nation the controlling motives of our policy are first the preservation of our workers from a competition they cannot meet while they retain the things American life offers them and their children, and second, the preservation of domestic harmony which depends upon the assimilation of all our people to the manner of life and thought which are American.

Japanese immigration, as already proved, is a threat to the American worker not merely on the coast but elsewhere, and resistance by whatever means are required will have not only the support of the statesmen on whom pacifist theory blames war but of the farmer in the field and the worker in the shop. The issue, on the American side at least, is one of both individual and national self-preservation, and there is a unanimity upon it as complete among the people as in the congress of their representatives.

As we have repeatedly asserted, we feel that a serious conflict can be avoided, and if the Japanese are as sincerely anxious for the maintenance of peace and friendly coöperation between our peoples as are the people of the United States, it will be avoided. We have proved conspicuously and substantially our respect and friendliness for the Japanese, and stand ever ready to show these sentiments again, but not by surrender of a universal right of sovereignty or by seriously compromising our internal unity and the material welfare of our working people.

LEAVE IT TO LA FOLLETTE.

Senator La Follette's plans for having his own way with the federal government as he has it with Wisconsin, always, of course, for the benefit of no one but "the people," are clear and precise. He knows what's the matter with the United States. So he prepares a platform to be presented to the resolutions committee of the Republican national convention, with the expectation that it will be rejected, and that he may then lead his supporters out of the meeting to organize a new party with himself at its head for President.

What he wants for "the people" is more government. He doesn't believe the present government has done very well. It has made grave errors in managing and conserving "the people's" heritage of natural resources, in oil and timber, for instance. It has mishandled the railroads and inflicted heavy burdens upon the farmers and others through high freight rates. It has passed only twenty-two laws for the benefit and protection of the agricultural regions and peoples, and they haven't accomplished their purpose. It has failed to make a successful merchant marine, despite the La Follette seaman's act. It has exalted wealth and Wall street and ground the common people into the dust.

That is a popular indictment. Some of it is true. La Follette, with Wisconsin in his vest pocket, and with the Dakotas, Minnesota, and parts of other constituencies within easy grasp, knows how to draw up such an indictment. Many of his followers would follow him out of the Republican convention and out of the Republican party if he desires. But the great majority of Americans will ask why, if government management has been as bad as Senator La Follette says it has been, should we hand to government the added duties and responsibilities of running our railroads, making our courts subordinate to congress, conducting the federal reserve board through the common people instead of experienced bankers, etc., etc.?

Senator La Follette knows what's the matter. Our present government is corrupt and inefficient. Therefore, give government more power and responsibility, with him at its head.

FARMER RAINEY ON THE LATEST FARM BILL.

Representative Henry T. Rainey of Illinois is making a determined fight against the McNary-Haugen bill. The bill proposes to organize and finance government corporations for the purchase, export, and sale of various farm products—chiefly wheat—and the fixing of domestic sale prices for such products on a vague basis of equality with prices our farmers must pay for what they buy.

Mr. Rainey is a practical farmer and is thoroughly equipped to consider the farmer's interests in this matter. His comments on the bill, therefore, may have weight when opposition from some other sources would be popularly discounted, as most sound economic arguments are discounted on the ground that they favor "the interests." A few extracts from his discussion of the bill, therefore, are worthy of repetition and emphasis for the information of such farmers and farm organizations as are advocating the measure.

"This bill furnishes them (the packers) with an opportunity completely to crush their rivals, the independent butchers, and the small packing houses," he says.

"If the fixed price (applied under the provisions of the bill) is high enough to do the farmer any good, will it not have the effect of increasing acreage? Your answer to the above must, of course, be yes; and, if the acreage is increased and the production of the product is continually increased, will not the increased production make it always more and more difficult to maintain a price level?

"If the government goes actively into the grain business, can you think of any reason why it should not engage in other kinds of business? And if it engages in other kinds of business, why not in all other kinds of business?

"The bill was drawn by a Socialist who is employed in the department of agriculture. He told me he drew it.

"It would make more real bolsheviks in this country than Russia will ever be able to make."

The above are merely extracts from a practical farmer's comment on the bill. Unfortunately, the subject is too involved and extensive for comprehensive comment to be made briefly. If it were not too much to hope that farmers and others were truly anxious to inform themselves fully on the issue before making up their minds we would suggest that they write to Mr. Rainey at Washington for his full discussion of the subject. No one can read it and fail to be convinced of the inherent folly of the bill.

THE LOGIC OF PROHIBITION.

The prospect of being compelled to convince our grocer or a federal agent that we are not buying dried fruit for unlawful purposes should not surprise us. The situation is inherent in prohibition. Prohibition declares it a responsibility of government to prevent the individual from using alcoholic beverages. It necessarily follows therefore that government will assume power to take whatever steps may be required to prevent the individual from using such beverages. We have avoided facing this conclusion on the theory that expediency would put a check upon the actual application of the prohibitory principle. By shutting one's eyes to the logic of prohibition we miss its real significance and its inevitable consequence. We have declared that the federal government is lawfully concerned with our personal habits. We cannot object if the declaration is made fully effective and the actual force of government follows the principle and policy asserting it.

Prohibition puts the government in our homes. It is logical and inevitable that the agents of government should enter them to make its will effectual.

We cannot surrender our liberty and keep it.

ETIQUETTE IN THE ARMY.

Preaching before if not to the President Sunday a former army chaplain said it made his blood boil in France to see American privates debarred from a refreshment place because officers were there, while French poilus and officers were being served together. The comment is an example of a very general criticism of our army regulations as to military etiquette, to which we have recently called attention.

No one who has any understanding of the vital importance of subordination in military operations would encourage the complaints of malcontents, sentimentalists, pacifists and radicals against proper distinctions between the soldier and his leaders. Strict and prompt obedience is requisite to efficiency, to the common safety and the common purpose. But, as we have said, our regulations, derived to some extent from social conditions and military conceptions of other times and countries, draw distinctions and impose restraints which may be neither essential nor desirable.

Our opinion is that there should be an open minded reconsideration of our regulations in respect of the relations of officers and men, with the object of eliminating all requirements not essential to military order and efficiency and not consistent with American conceptions of social relations. We think, for example, that the distinction between noncommissioned and commissioned officers should be no other than that between each grade. The present distinction is in spirit a class, social distinction implying, although it really does not exist, an impassable barrier between the commissioned officer and the noncommissioned. We think that though the salute is an honorable and even an essential formality, it might be well in some measure to restrict it as an obligation.

We recognize that the moral and psychological effect of many military forms is of great importance and that too loose or relaxed a system would be demoralizing. But the army authorities should realize that the problem of discipline in an army of citizen soldiers, as ours is and must be, must be worked out in close relation to the habits, temperament, and social conceptions of the nation. This the modern French army seems to have accomplished better than we have, and a change is, in our opinion, of importance to the army and the nation. It is important that military service should be freed from every disadvantage or handicap that we can get rid of and be made as attractive to the patriotic civilian as we can make it. Small irritations and unnecessary restrictions of private conduct ought to be weeded out wherever possible.

We think experienced National Guard and reserve officers could assist the professional in an examination of this subject, and such examination is worth while.

THE COMMUTER'S TICKET.

Skyland, N. C.—Days go, sung to but unnumbered. The traveling clip which nicks the April ticket and is ready to spring on May is unheeded. The only clocks are the blossoms, the peach which bursts into fragrant pink in the sun after a gray day of warm drizzle and now is giving petals to the breeze, the cherry which has veiled itself in white, the apple which has made its red buds.

The thorns are ready to surge into bloom. Dogwood and rhododendron buds are swelling and there is a haze of green in the Spanish oak, at the top of which the brown thrasher sings. Bluebirds flash through the blossoming trees. The chewink had added his incessant call to that of the yellowhammer and cardinal.

The wind is from the south. Bees are on the wing. The intimate, minute world, close at hand, hums and is warm and perfumed. The horizon is the Appalachian range, ridge after ridge, rolling one after another until in the furthest blue is the dim and distant hog back which marks the sapphire region. The lights and colors shift.

The clock is stopped. Days are of no more consequence than the petals which drop. The ground is brown with the chestnut burrs which were of last year. The blossoms are of this year and Pisgah was to the Cherokee just what it is to the man who now plows for corn.

"THE GOOD OLD DAYS."

An old-time Chicago newspaper reporter, speaking before the Medill School of Journalism, sighs for "the good old days" of the so-called human interest story, and mourns that reporting has degenerated.

His is a natural sentimental reaction. He is no longer in the newspaper business. We are. And we also remember "the good old days," but without a sigh. We disagree with the conclusion that reporting has degenerated, and that "features" and comic strips have demoralized and lowered the quality of newspapers and the newspaper profession.

There was a time when the "human interest story" was an important part of every metropolitan newspaper. It came in various forms, and on various subjects, but was as stereotyped in thought and theory as it was original and effective in expression. A little boy in a police court, battling against the law and the neighborhood for possession of the mongrel dog which had nipped the baker's delivery horse and started a runaway which strewed the street with buns and doughnuts, or something of the kind, was a popular subject. Frank O'Malley could make two columns of highly entertaining reading of that. The prodigal offspring of a fine old family, waking in a Madison street flop house on Christmas morning, signing the pledge, and deciding to go back to his white haired mother and begin life anew, was good for a column and a half of sobs and heart uplift.

And in the same newspaper which printed these stories, always referred to as "classics" by friends of the writer and editor, one could seldom find a single line devoted to the opposition party, or to opinions contrary to the editor's. To get both sides of any story or event in which policy might figure, one had to buy two papers of opposing views. Such were the "good old days."

How have we changed? Today a good newspaper seeks to fill most of the requirements of its readers for news facts and entertainment. The human interest has not been eliminated. It is provided in the "features," comic strips, and pictures which the old timers deride. What police court dog could be more real than Smitty's dog, or the Briggs dogs? What prodigal could be more in need of repentance than Moon Mullins? What commonplace family could be more full of human error than the Gumps? What neighborhood group could be more full of gossipy interest in each other's business than those of Gasoline Alley? And who would rather take time to read a two column "classic" than to absorb the daily doings of these people with a glance at a picture which combines romance, humor, pathos, and human nature?

It is true that "the good old days" are gone. But it is also true, we believe, that they have been succeeded by better days. The newspaper business has not yet reached its pinnacle, we admit, but we believe it is ascending.

HIGHER EDUCATION.

The Sterling-Reed bill, to establish a federal department of education with a secretary in the cabinet, to tax all the states and divide the proceeds among those which conform to the bill, and in general to direct education through a federal bureaucracy, has been up for consideration before the house committee on education.

The measure has been recommended for adoption by various minor educators of the country. As in the case of most idealistic legislation, it has met with comparatively little opposition, because possible opponents have feared that they might be accused of being reactionary and opposed to all good works for the benefit of the people.

It is encouraging, therefore, to read that such men as President Emeritus Eliot of Harvard, President Emeritus Judson of the University of Chicago, Dr. Henry S. Pritchett of the Carnegie Foundation, and the president of Johns Hopkins university have written letters to the committee opposing the bill. We know that President Kinley of the University of Illinois and other leading university heads oppose it on the same grounds. These men are great educators with long experience. Their best thought is for higher education. When they say, as they do, that the Sterling-Reed bill is a dangerous expansion of bureaucracy into local affairs, and a menace to the very purposes it is theoretically designed to serve, it must have weight.

The bill is bad. The real educators of the country are to be thanked for opposing it, regardless of the possible unpopularity of such opposition.

OF A FEATHER.

A London taxi driver, putting on a spurt to reach a railway station at a certain time, ran down a cart, upsetting the contents.

A policeman, confronting the taxi driver, demanded his name.

"Michael O'Brien," came the reply.

"Indeed," said the policeman. "That's my name, too. where do ye come from?"

"Cork."

"And so do I. Now just stand there a moment while I go over and charge this man with backing into ye."—St. Paul Dispatch.

FAMILY JOBS.

"How would you like a job beating rugs this afternoon, Bobby?" asked Bobby's mother.

"All right," replied Bobby, angelically, "but I'm afraid I can't take it, because dad gave me 25 cents to do something for him this afternoon."

"What was that?"

"Not make a lot of noise."—Everybody's Magazine.

CARE OF SOME FOOT AILMENTS.

INGROWING NAILS.

A NAIL ingrows because it lies diagonally on the toe. It assumes this position because it is pushed there by the shoe. It is the narrow toed shoe that is most at fault. In ingrowing toenails there are two stages—the nonsuppurative and the suppurative.

Wearing broad toed shoes will sometimes permit the nail to resume its old straight position on the toe. Even when that is impossible, wearing a broad toed shoe will remove the pressure of the leather on the one corner of the nail, which pressure drives the other corner into the flesh. In some cases, in addition to broad toed shoes, some wool should be worn over the toe. It can be fastened there with adhesive or it can be fastened inside the shoe.

The next line of effort should be directed toward lifting the down growing corner of the nail out of the bed into which it is cutting. This is done by keeping a little wool or cotton under that corner. If this is changed daily and the amount used is slowly increased the corner can be lifted out of the sore bed in a few weeks, and when it has been so lifted the trouble is at an end.

Cutting the nail square, notching it in the middle, and scraping the top of it all help to this end.

Where suppuration has begun wash the feet daily and apply a mixture of alcoholic iodine (tincture of iodine) and water, equal parts.

SWEATY FEET.

Wash the feet each night. Dry well. Once a week, or perhaps twice, after drying, apply a solution of aluminum chloride in distilled water. Allow it to dry on. This should not be applied too frequently, nor in excessive quantities.

Since lack of ventilation of the shoe is the principal cause of sweaty and offensive feet, a person subject to it should not wear patent leather shoes, rubber boots, or rubbers. Cloth shoes are better than leather ones; sandals are better than shoes. And going barefooted is better still, though the suggestion has no practical value.

HAMMER TOE.

This condition is generally caused by crowding the ball of the foot, as is done in wearing narrow shoes. One toe—generally the second one—is pushed upwards and may come to lie across some other toe. Wearing a pad of wool on top of the hammer toe sometimes helps. In some cases adhesive strips running over the hammer toe and under the adjoining toes may help hold it down. Wearing broad toed shoes is the best preventive. It also helps to cure.

RIGID TOE.

This is generally a symptom accompanying a bunion. Soak the feet at night in cold water for several minutes. Measures for the cure of bunions indirectly cure rigid toe.

MEASURING BLOOD PRESSURE.

J. G. C. writes:

1. Should a man's blood pressure be 100 plus his age? If not correct, what should it be?

2. I am 46 years of age. My blood pressure is 148. Is that so high that I must follow a diet—avoid red meats, coffee, confections, and reduce my smoking to three cigars a day?

3. One of my physicians tells me I must follow the above rigidly, while another said with my natural nervous disposition, my blood pressure is not too high. Which is right?

REPLY.

1. That method of measuring gets the normal too high. A better rule is as follows: 120 being normal at age 20, add thereto one for each two years over 20. That also gets the normal somewhat too high.

2. Your normal, according to the above rule, is 143. Your pressure is a little high, but not enough to warrant you in making a martyr of yourself. Be moderate in all things, have a physical examination, including a urinalysis, at least once a year, and let it go at that.

3. I try to keep out of squabbles between man and wife. Disagreements between doctors are likewise dangerous situations to mix in.

HARMFUL IF NOT DANGEROUS.

Mrs. J. S. writes: 1. Having been bothered for over thirteen years with inflammatory rheumatism, I am coming to you with a few questions. I was told the following would cure it: One grain calomel twice per month followed with Epsom salts the following day.

2. Will that amount of calomel affect my heart?

3. Is it dangerous to take?

REPLY.

1. No.
2. No.
3. While it is not dangerous, it is harmful.

RESIDENTS OBJECT TO FILLER.

Chicago, April 14.—[Friend of the People.]—Your attention is invited to the manner in which scavengers are filling Beverly avenue, just south of 95th street, Chicago, Ill.

Instead of ashes and cinders they are dumping loads of rubbish containing broken bottles, tin cans, carcasses of rats, cats, and other small animals, as well as ordinary garbage.

For sanitary as well as other reasons the citizens of this vicinity would appreciate your assistance in abating this nuisance. C. F.

The superintendent of the Nineteenth ward reports that filling put in Beverly avenue was at the request of residents on the street and consisted of ashes and miscellaneous rubbish. Nothing of an unsanitary or objectionable nature was put in. No further material will be put in and cans and other rubbish will be covered with ashes or street dirt.
THOMAS H. BYRNE,
Superintendent of Streets.

COLD FLAT AND COLD WATER.

Chicago, April 12.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I live in a two flat building with a lease which calls for hot water in all of the faucets. We do not have the water and have to heat all that we need. We also have had to burn the oven to heat the flat. Can we deduct from our rent the amount we use for gas? F. W.

You might try that. Your action in so doing would at least have the effect of placing the burden of recovering on the landlord.
TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

A CHANGE OF HEART.

Chicago, April 16.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—At the primary election I voted for one Republican candidate. Now when the regular election comes off do I have to support the Republican party or can I change and vote for the Democratic candidate? My husband says I can make the change and it will be all right. W. F. H.

Your husband's advise is right.
TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

NO NOTICE OF RAISE IN RENT.

Chicago, April 16.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Can the landlord raise the rent of a tenant having a lease without giving him sixty days' notice? The lease expires May 1, and so far we have had no notice of an increase. V. D.

It is not necessary for him to give you any notice of an increase.

WASHINGTON.—Maj. J. H. Eaton, late of Chicago, has been appointed paymaster in the regular army.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—Thirteen persons arrested recently charged with being engaged in the brutal attack on returned soldiers at Charleston, Coles county, took the oath of allegiance and were released.

CLEVELAND.—Maj. Gen. Daniel E. Sickles and staff arrived here and stopped at the Weddell House. He is on his way to Chicago.

MEXICO CITY.—Dictator Huerta flatly refused to salute the United States flag, as demanded by President Wilson.

WASHINGTON.—It's war. Huerta's defiance of the ultimatum of President Wilson means the beginning of hostilities today. President Wilson will go before congress with his message on the Mexican crisis at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Immediately thereafter a resolution authorizing the President to use the land and naval forces to obtain redress for the insult to the flag at Tampico will be passed. President Wilson then will issue a proclamation blockading every port in Mexico.

CHICAGO.—"Flying squadrons" of police were sent out to visit saloons, poolrooms, and other hangouts of criminals in the drive on vice and crime forced on Chief Gleason by exposure of conditions in the old levee district.

CHICAGO.—The plant of the W. M. Welch Manufacturing company, 1516 Orleans street, was destroyed by fire and thousands of blank diplomas ready for spring graduations went up in smoke.

NOT FOR ART'S SAKE.

Chicago, April 16.—The "occupational tax" recently voted by the city of Santa Fe is aimed at the resident artists who have journeyed there from all parts of the country to immortalize on canvas the beauties and splendors of the magnificent scenery with which this section abounds.

These men and women who, at heavy expense to themselves, have come to the Santa Fe region not only pay the exorbitant prices charged in the west, but they have, at no cost to the city, advertised this section to tourists by means of their paintings, which may be seen in every city of importance in the country.

Is it possible that the city fathers of Santa Fe are beginning to take credit for the natural beauties of nature that the Creator scattered with a lavish hand a few million years ago? Perhaps they think they invented the mountains, the gorges, and the wonderful coloring that is transcribed to the painter's canvas.

This tax, if continued, will not only bar out the artists, but it will cut off at the source the best advertising the city and state can buy. Santa Fe has recently completed a magnificent art museum, in which only paintings of southwestern subjects are permitted to be hung. Some of the best artists in Chicago and New York spend months every year in New Mexico painting pictures for the museum and for national distribution. There is no remuneration for pictures accepted by the museum.

DOING AN AMERICAN'S HEART GOOD.

Chicago, April 15.—After reading for months the rakings from Washington and the arguments of pacifists pro and con from all over the country it does a real American's heart good to read the big headline in today's TRIBUNE. It will also awaken some of the other countries of the world. Although I have nothing against the Japanese or Japan itself, considering them just as good as anybody else, still after all what this country has done for Japan from time to time it seems to me they could do better than always have a chip on their shoulder and now as much as tell us what to do or not to do. The result shows plainly that, although one slacker may shout louder than 1,000 true Americans, that when the time comes with anything worth while the men representing us in the senate have shown that we can stand on our own feet and will stick together, and there are millions in this country to back them up. When the time comes when some other country has to tell us what to do, thank God we have the men with backbone enough to call a halt.

CONCERNING THE DENOUNCER OF N. U. "MILITARISM."

Chicago, April 15.—I read in this morning's TRIBUNE that the Rev. A. A. Heist in a speech made to ministers yesterday denounced the "military spirit" of Northwestern university.

About two months ago I heard this man speak in a church. He just brought out two thoughts in his talk. He bitterly denounced the wealthy classes and intimated that we should hate them and fight them in every way that we could.

Then he praised the I. W. W. Here are two statements that he made: "Some of the happiest hours of my life have been spent with the I. W. W." "The I. W. W. of course are not trying to undermine our government." He was significantly silent, however, as to just what they are striving to do.
LILLIAN CRASKE LEAVITT.

"THE BUSINESS MOOD."

Chicago, April 16.—I want to commend you on your editorial in this morning's paper on "The Business Mood." It is time for all of us to face the business situation as it is and realize the tremendous resources of the United States. Go out after business rather than sit down and worry about something that may never happen.

I remember hearing the late J. P. Morgan say at a banquet one time that he "would never sell the United States short."

If we have confidence in our country, in ourselves, and in the product we manufacture there is no reason to be pessimistic, and I am glad you are voicing a note of optimism at this time.

There is business to be had if we go out after it, so let us get down to brass tacks, forget the stock market, and do business.
HOWARD ELTING,

AMERICAN PRIDE.

Chicago, April 16.—It is mighty good to know that we have one thoroughly American newspaper, and one that in no way sympathizes with Japanese aspirations in America.

I have read every editorial upon this subject which has appeared in this great paper, and I heartily agree with every statement contained therein.

The greatly spoken of "Japanese pride" is enough to make one sick. What about American pride? American pride is pride of progeny rather than the oriental pride of ancestor.

This immigration question is not one of pride, either American or Japanese, but it is a question of what is best for America and Americans.
ANNA J. ROBERTS.

BUT WHAT IF THEY SEEK COMFORT RATHER THAN YOUTH!

Chicago, April 17.—The article written on the subject of bobbed hair by James A. Martin in your issue of April 15 was right to the point. Yes, a woman loses her dignity. Poor, foolish women, will they ever learn to follow their own "dictates"? They are simply led into these "fads." It has disgusted me to see the frail old girls joining up with the younger set just to look young. If they could only realize how it helps to show the lines of age in their faces they would say adieu to bobbed hair.

PROFITS IN STATE POLICE.

Chicago, April 16.—If a state police force existed in Illinois at this time and performed no other service than the protection of life and property in Williamson county it would be worth to the people many times over its cost for the year.

"The Development of a Merchandising Ideal"

SCIENCE and Invention, the twin magicians, with a few smart tricks added to the old act, are still headliners in the Theatre of Achievement.  The schemes and projects which kept the brain-cells of our forefathers active, have been handed down from sire to son, and the job of the present generation is to improve its inheritance. Borrowed thought stimulates the world's work. * * * And so, we've "hitched things up" here, and "stepped on the gas" there, yet the trim and tricky speed wagon of today is merely the ox-cart of yesterday, cured of its "creaks and whines" by the magic touch of Progress.  Indeed, there is little new under the sun. The Hub's recently adopted policy of "concentrated buying" is neither new nor original—it is simply a good old-fashioned merchandising ideal developed to a greater degree by The Hub than ever before attempted by any American clothing institution. Its importance to the public is emphasized by the exceptional values below.

America's Greatest Purchase of 7500
FINE SPRING SUITS

"Concentrated Buying" Increases The Hub's Already Greater Value-Giving Power

$35 and $50

For Suits Worth up to $50 For Suits Worth up to $75

FINER quality at lower prices is vitally interesting to the man or young man exacting about the clothes he wears. It is to those men particularly that this great special selling will appeal. The ability to accomplish such decisive money-saving opportunities is making The Hub the most talked of establishment in the country—making firmer friends of old patrons as well as winning thousands of new ones.

Here are Spring Suits in the newest Lytton Greys and Powder Blues—tailored to our most exacting standards, in the smart styles that have made The Hub recognized as America's leading style center. Such a tremendous volume as ours so efficiently co-ordinated with our modern policy of "concentrated buying" has, indeed, worked wonders. It will pay you well to inspect these values.

ONLY The Hub with its new and greater power could engineer such an event as this. Foreign makers, anxious to gain prestige in America and knowing the country-wide reputation and magnitude of this Store, have made drastic concessions for the privilege of becoming established here.

Londonderry is the copyrighted name which typifies all imported merchandise chosen abroad exclusively for The Hub. Every Coat was personally selected for its pattern and style—their correctness is unquestioned. Tweeds, homespuns, cheviots, diagonal weaves and plain shades offer a selection sufficiently varied to insure satisfactory choice. It is indeed an extraordinary opportunity.

NEW HUDSPETH ARREST MARKS PARKING BATTLE

Capt. Hogan, Traffic Cop, Wonders 'Who's Who?'

Harry Hudspeth, self-constituted czar of the automobile parking space beneath the southern approach to the Michigan boulevard link bridge, was arrested for what the police maintain is about the 100th time.

Since Mr. Hudspeth has developed into a regular "Cap" Streeter, defending squatter's rights with pistol and deputy sheriff's star, owners of scratched, scarred, and mud spattered cars—repenting at not having slipped Mr. Hudspeth a two-bit piece—are wondering just who Harry Hudspeth is.

Autoists' Wonder Grows.

By what right or political pull does Hudspeth continue to hold sole dominion over a public thoroughfare?

Capt. Patrick Hogan, commanding the traffic squad, who thinks he has some authority in the city's streets, has been bested by Hudspeth in many court battles, but Hogan is persistent.

Hudspeth was sentenced to a year in the Bridewell on a statutory charge by Judge Hopkins in 1913. Then in November, 1919, Judge Hayes changed a charge of con game against him to one of larceny and sentenced him to three months more.

Rises Greater than Before.

Then Hudspeth suddenly bobbed up under the link bridge with a deputy's star and a gun and announced himself guardian of all cars parked there. That is, he would guard all cars for an afternoon or, if the motorist desired, by the month. Motorists might pay if they wished.

The parking space being public property and traffic policemen paid by taxpayers' money being on duty, some car owners refused to pay Hudspeth anything. As their court testimony shows, some returned to find freshly polished cars covered with mud. One found his door broken and another removed a screw from his tire.

Judge Proves His Friend.

When the police first began arresting Hudspeth on these charges back in 1922, Judge Charles F. McKinley went to his defense. It was learned it was on that judge's recommendation Sheriff Hoffman had supplied Hudspeth with a star.

The Rev. Elmer Williams of the Better Government association is Hudspeth's latest champion.

Hudspeth accused the police of persecuting him, of trying to shake him down, but he has failed to name any officer who solicited a bribe.

Voluntary Tipping Upheld.

Capt. Hogan appealed to the city law department, which held there is no law to prevent Hudspeth from accepting voluntary tips from motorists. On the grounds of this decision Hudspeth's attorneys—and now the Rev. Mr. Williams—threaten to obtain an injunction against the police restraining them from interfering with Hudspeth's "watch service."

Once when Hudspeth's pistol and belt of cartridges were laid on the bench of Judge Henry M. Walker that judge is quoted as saying: "You're a menace and ought to be put away. You're all wrong. There's a strange streak somewhere. I'm going to tell the police to lock you up every time they catch you."

Examined and Let Go.

The judge ordered Hudspeth examined by Dr. Hickson and a few days later discharged him without comment. There are thirty-five complaints pending against Hudspeth now in the corporation counsel's office, but, as Capt. Hogan says:

"Just look who Hudspeth is."

In the meanwhile Hudspeth is said to gain an annual income of something over $6,000 a year by renting the lower level of Michigan boulevard to motorists.

"Call Hursen of course—"

This is the answer given to the question which is asked every day in many parts of Chicago, "Who will we have to direct the funeral?" "Hursen, of course!"

The Business of the world always "gravitates" to the men who do things far better, who serve generously, who give far more, who furnish far better things, and who charge far less for them.

These things make up the policy on which Hursen has built the largest and most remarkable institution of its kind in America—and no man, no set of men, no system of graft will prevail against it. It is the combination which broke the strangle-hold of the funeral trust in Chicago.

A funeral directed by Hursen is distinguished by the super-elegance of everything which is furnished, by the unusual manner in which all things are done, by the unusual generosity of service rendered, by the unusually high type of employes who render this unusual service, and by the unusually low charges, which are invariably far less than those charged elsewhere.

Hursen automobiles at Hursen funerals excite universal admiration everywhere. For comfort, roominess and elegance they are unsurpassed by many of the highest-priced automobiles of the day. The charges for these Hursen-cars are no higher than the usual auto hire. Call Hursen, of course!

PUSHES ATTACK TO AVERT SPREAD OF SMALLPOX

Bundesen Hasn't Seen Adverse Decision.

Pending council action on proposed ordinances to create a local board of health, Commissioner Bundesen will act under existing law to compel vaccination of persons he believes to have been exposed to smallpox infection.

Sufficient authority for such action, he believes, exists in statutes which, he says, consider the Chicago health commissioner as an agent of the state board of health.

Hears Court Denies Authority.

While no official word of the decision had reached the city hall yesterday, up to the time for closing for the day, unofficial word from Springfield was to the effect that the Supreme court on Friday declared the authority of the health commissioner to be insufficient.

That decision, according to news dispatches, was given on appeal in the case of Lester Boroughs of 4125 North Le Claire avenue, who was barred from the Portage Park high school for refusal to be vaccinated. Dr. Bundesen's authority as exerted by an inspector was upheld by Judge Joseph B. David, who denied that the boy's parents had ground for damages when their suit for $10,000 was brought before him.

According to word from Springfield, Judge David was reversed and the action of a local board of health and not alone the authority of a commissioner is declared necessary to sustain such health measures.

"Smallpox Cycle Here."

"This is a smallpox 'cycle' year as reports from every large city in the country will indicate," Dr. Bundesen said. "In Detroit, Los Angeles, Windsor, Ont., throughout Indiana and southern states, thousands of smallpox cases have been reported.

"Even in Chicago 118 cases have been found thus far in 1924. During the whole of the previous year few more than 100 cases were noted. Rigid regulations requiring vaccination wherever it can be done, have kept Chicago's smallpox rate down to its low level, and prevented a devastating epidemic."

Board's Proposed Personnel.

Under the ordinance proposed to the council by Mayor Dever, a board of health headed by Health Commissioner Bundesen and including Commissioner of Public Works A. A. Sprague, Chief of Police Collins, City Physician C. H. Jones, and Corporation Counsel F. X. Busch would be created.

Appointment of Dr. John C. Geiger, 5338 Kimbark avenue, United States public health service epidemiologist to be local assistant health commissioner and epidemiologist in charge, probably will be announced tomorrow by Dr. Bundesen. The salary is $6,500.

Dr. Hugh O. Jones, formerly in charge of the department's school health service, who led fellow employés in a promotional test with an average of $3.03, will become medical advisor for an insurance company.

BUILDING BOOM THROUGHOUT U.S., COOLIDGE HEARS

Washington, D. C., April 19.—[Special.]—W. J. Moore, Chicago, president of the American Bond and Mortgage company, was a caller at the White House today. Mr. Moore told President Coolidge the business outlook in the middle west and in the east is particularly bright in the building industry. He said that he had just completed a nation-wide survey of the building and housing situation—that today between 65 and 75 per cent of the shortage of building of all kinds caused by the war has been made up.

"Until the remaining 25 to 35 per cent is made up there can be no substantial reduction in rents—and even then there must always enter into the question the matter of building costs," Mr. Moore said. "The labor situation is an important factor. Today the average age of the skilled workman in the building trades is fully fifteen years greater than the average age of a few years ago. And today there are pitifully few apprentices.

"The common labor situation also is acute. The restriction of immigration has a very great effect on the supply of labor, and, therefore, resolves itself into higher wages and into higher building costs."

U. S. FLYERS DO 400 MILE HOP TO DUTCH HARBOR

Dutch Harbor, Unalaska, April 19.—[By the Associated Press, via Bremerton, Wash., Wireless.]—Three of the United States army aviators flying around the world, who left Chignik, Alaska, at 11 o'clock this morning, arrived safely here at 5:10 this afternoon. They made the 400 mile hop as per schedule in six hours.

The flyers will await here the arrival of Maj. Frederick L. Martin, commander of the expedition, who is at Kanatak, Alaska, installing a new motor in his air cruiser after being forced down Tuesday.

Natives Await Planes.

Dutch Harbor, Unalaska, April 19.—[United Press.]—Intense excitement prevailed among Unalaskan natives today as they watched the skies for the coming of the American round the world flyers.

Maj. Martin, who was forced down Tuesday at Cape Igvak, today described his experiences in a wireless message. "I am awfully lucky to be alive," he commented. "When we were forced down at Cape Igvak I taxied to near shore and anchored, remaining aboard, knowing that if the anchor dragged we were lost.

"There was wonderful moonlight, the night was calm and cold, and the first splendid weather here in eight months proved our salvation. Yet there was always the thought that we had struck the first favorable flying weather of the year in these parts and then had encountered trouble within 100 miles of Chignik, our destination.

British Flyer Crosses Dead Sea.

CAIRO, Egypt, April 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—Stuart MacLaren, British round the world aviator, successfully crossed the Dead sea and arrived safely at Ziza, Palestine, en route to Bagdad today.

100TH ANNIVERSARY OF BYRON'S DEATH IS OBSERVED IN GREECE

MISSOLONGHI, Greece, April 19.—Missolonghi, where Lord Byron, British poet, died on April 19, 1824, after a stay of three months, during which time he organized the fight for the liberation of Greece from Turkey, honored the poet's memory today. The principal streets were decorated with British flags and thousands of laurel branches. In the park of the town native girls and boys in national costume held exercises near Lord Byron's monument.

In the port of Missolonghi a British squadron of two cruisers and six destroyers and a Greek cruiser and two destroyers rendered homage. Premier Papanastasiou, in a memorial address, spoke of Greece's eternal gratitude to Lord Byron.

Honor Poet in England.

LONDON, April 19.—[By the Associated Press.] — Literary London turned its thoughts back to Byron today, the one hundredth anniversary of his death at Missolonghi in the cause of Hellenic freedom. Not only the Britons, whose language he enriched with his prose and poetry, but also the Greeks, whose freedom he strove for, are honoring him in the United Kingdom. The communities of Greeks living in the British isles today laid wreaths on statues of the poet in London, Nottingham, Cambridge, and Aberdeen.

Remembered by Rome.

ROME, April 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—The centenary of the death of Lord Byron at Missolonghi, Greece, was observed here today with the placing of a wreath before the portrait of the poet in the Keats-Shelley institute, in the Piazza di Spagna.

SUSPECT KILLS SLEUTH POSING IN VICTIM'S TRAP

Flint, Mich., April 19.—[Special.]—Detective Matthew Hauer is dead and police are searching for Louis Korn, his alleged slayer, following failure of an effort to trap Korn by substituting Hauer for the citizen who police heard, Korn planned to hold up. Korn eluded a cordon of twenty detectives after the killing and escaped.

After tracing a series of holdups to Korn, officers laid plans late Friday night to trap the suspect. Receiving from an underworld woman a tip that S. O. N. Yats was to be robbed as he drove into his garage the inspector threw a cordon of men about the place, and Hauer was substitute. When Korn saw it was Hauer he ran, firing at his pursuer.

FARMER-LABOR PARTY PICKS ITS DELEGATES

The Illinois branch of the Farmer-Labor party of the United States held a convention yesterday at 180 West Washington street and elected delegates to the national convention of the Farmer-Laborites which will be held in Cleveland on July 4. Credentials of 123 delegates were presented at the convention.

John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, who was chairman of the convention, read a communication from the Illinois committee of the Conference for Progressive Political Action which advocated closer affiliation between the two groups. The latter faction will hold a get-together conference at the Great Northern hotel on May 4.

KEWANEE

Look in the Basement First

This is the time of year when many members of the Human Family tie up the chickens, wrap up the What-not, bandage the legs of the piano and look for new places to live. If you haven't picked out the place, the most important thing to do is to LOOK IN THE BASEMENT FIRST—find the Kewanee Firebox Boiler before you sign the lease.

Don't let shimmying robins, blooming tulips and apple blossoms make you forget the trouble you had keeping warm during the Winter. Another Winter will come. If you pick out a home that is equipped with ancient heating apparatus, you will merely ask Trouble to go along with you. You'll drop from "the frying pan into the fire."

Bear in mind that the happiness you have in the new home, will be measured by the heating boiler that's there. If it is a Kewanee All-steel firebox boiler, you can sign the lease with a smile. If it is some other type of boiler, than you can gird up your loins for an all-Winter scrap with the janitor and the landlord.

The Old Man Behind the Boiler will tell you that the most comfortable apartments in the world are equipped with Kewanee Boilers. Write him a letter

POINCARE RAPS HASTE IN ACTING ON DAWES PLAN

Attacks Debt Board for Note to Germany.

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, April 19.—The first jarring note of the general allied chorus of approval of the Dawes reparations experts' plan will be sounded tomorrow by Premier Poincare in a letter addressed to Louis Barthou, president of the reparations commission.

M. Poincare's note does not desert the French acceptance of the general principles of the plan, but it expresses a thinly veiled dissatisfaction with the reparations commission's methods of handling the Dawes-McKenna reports as regards Germany.

The French premier criticizes the commission's action in asking Germany to prepare the machinery to execute the plan before hearing the views of the allies regarding their action in case Germany defaults on the experts' requirements.

Will Cling to Ruhr.

M. Poincare declares Germany has never failed to fulfill demands in the past when it understood that the allies had reached an understanding beforehand, and states this should have been done in the present case, thus insuring the German government's fulfillment of the new reparations demands.

M. Poincare insists that the allies should immediately get together and decide what sanctions to take in case Germany defaults under the experts' plan, thus clashing with the British view that the allies should await a decision until an actual case of default occurs. He reiterates that the French and the Belgians will not evacuate the Ruhr until Germany has put the plan well into execution.

The premier urges the reparations commission to prepare immediately a precise list of the parts of the experts' report falling under the commission's competency and those falling under the allied governments' jurisdiction, and also to tell the German government exactly what it is expected to do.

Called Slap at Commission.

M. Poincare's letter will be sent to M. Barthou tomorrow, but probably will not be acted upon until after the Easter holidays. The letter is a definite, plain statement of the French policy regarding security, and is sure to be regarded as a slap at the reparations commission.

M. Poincare has arranged to confer next week with Premier Theunis of Belgium on the Dawes plan. This meeting is expected to be followed by a conference between Prime Minister MacDonald and French and Belgian premiers.

"PUT GERMANY ON HONOR"

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, April 19.—Accept the experts' report on German reparations in its entirety and get Germany into the league of nations are the main points in the British Labor government's reparations program, Prime Minister MacDonald told the Independent Labor party at the Royal theater at York today, where he made an address on the eve of the party's conference.

"Let us say to Germany we accept your word," the prime minister said. "We have no preparations made to meet any default on your part. If, after those solemn obligations, you do default, then we, Great Britain and France, will be closer allies than ever.

"Psychological effect is with nations as with individuals. There is created in their minds such a character that they would rather go to the stake than not to justify confidence reposed in them."

Direct Answer to Poincare.

This appears to be a direct answer to Premier Poincare's recent speech indicating that France would prepare for full reoccupation of the Ruhr any time that Germany defaulted in its payments under the proposed plan.

The prime minister insisted that Germany ought to join the league of nations, saying:

"The experts' report has given us a chance of beginning afresh and it must be dealt with as a whole, although there are things in it that I don't like. By getting Germany to join the league of nations an organization will be completed on which I would like to base the future peace of Europe."

BERLIN-LONDON PARLEY ON

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

BERLIN, April 19.—Pourparlers between Germany and Great Britain have been begun to obtain a quick and clear international interpretation of the Dawes reparations experts' report, THE TRIBUNE learns from official sources tonight. At present Germany is anxiously awaiting England's reply to its latest question as to how it interprets Premier Poincare's recent speeches regarding a continued occupation of the Ruhr.

Foreign Minister Stresemann announced today that the German government, following its acceptance of the Dawes report, finds its position much strengthened and he feels confident that the elections will swing in favor of the present cabinet.

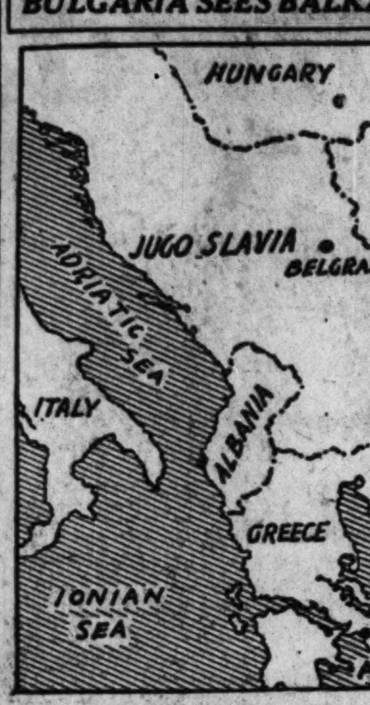
"The nation is showing greater willingness to support the common sense parties, which want to live at peace with the world, instead of the nationalists, eager for war with France or the communists, who want a labor upheaval," he said.

Catholics and Socialists Unite.

An election understanding has been reached between the strong groups of the Catholic party of Bavaria and the socialists. Men as strikingly different as Gen. von Ludendorff, Herr Scheidemann, Admiral von Tirpitz, President Ebert, and the democratic prince, Max von Baden, are appealing to their friends to put the interests of Germany first.

Herr Stresemann said Germany's acceptance of the experts' report was complete and binding for whatever government may come, but the details as to how the Dawes plan will be operated must still be worked out.

BULGARIA SEES BALKAN WAR PERIL ENDED



SOFIA, Bulgaria, April 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—"If the negotiations recently concluded or now approaching conclusion are successful, the danger of war will be averted in the Balkans for many years," declared Foreign Minister Kalloff today.

"The latest of these agreements, that with Roumania, will be signed in two or three days. The preliminary agreement already signed provides for joint action to prevent incursions across the Roumanian frontier, with two mixed commissions sitting. A blanket agreement covering all points of possible dispute, including payment by Bulgaria for the war seizures, is practically completed.

"The agreement with Jugo-Slavia is working out well. The situation between the two countries is considerably eased.

"The negotiations of the mixed commission regarding Greece is proceeding with excellent prospects of early agreement. The chief difficulty there is the question of repatriating and reëstablishing the refugees.

"We look forward to the time when the Balkan states shall coöperate instead of disagreeing. As a defeated country we are especially desirous of earning the sympathy of the great powers, which is indispensable to the resumption of our normal life."

SOCIETY AND ACTORS FROLIC FOR CHARITY

Society tossing gaudy balloons at members of the stage aristocracy, actors tooting tin horns and whistles in reply, living tableaux, a dancing contest, a masked king and queen, in fact a miniature Mardi Gras—this was the scene at the spring carnival for the Actors' Fund of America last night at the Bal Tabarin, Hotel Sherman, which Eugene Byfield and Frank Bering had donated for charitable purposes.

Dancing began at 11 o'clock and at midnight a series of tableaux vivants was staged by the Duncan sisters, Martha Kretz, Stanley Price, Frances Severn, Margaret Swanson, Gregory Kelly, Phil Hughes, Roger Gray and "Little Jessie James" chorus and Marion Marcus Clarke.

Ernest Truex was master of ceremonies, which included the guessing of the identity of the king and queen. Mrs. William Rend (Katherine Prest) and Gregory Kelly were the royal pair.

Among those who were hosts at large parties were Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Swift Jr., Mr. and Mrs. James Minotto, Mr. and Mrs. William Rend, Mr. and Mrs. Warren Ripple, Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Bendix, Miss Olga Menn, Mr. and Mrs. Roy D. Keehn, Mr. and Mrs. Alan R. Follansbee, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Gowenlock, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wanner, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Lehman, and Miss Ethel Barrymore.

Earth Tremors Again Shake English Colliery

LONDON, April 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—Violent earth tremors were again reported today in the midland colliery district between Alfreton and Sutton in Ashfield.

DAWES PLAN HITS BERLIN TOO HARD, COL. AYRES SAYS

New York, April 19.—Col. Leonard P. Ayres, one of the expert technical advisers of the McKenna reparation committee, arrived today on the Berengaria.

The Dawes plan, he said, was a good one and a great advance over what previously had been done, but it fixed sums too great for Germany to pay.

"The present plan," the colonel asserted, "is inflexible, and it should be made so that Germany can pay according to her genuine ability to pay."

Col Ayres, who is vice president of the Cleveland Trust company of Cleveland, O., was an advisor of the second expert committee which was appointed to search for German capital abroad.

America a "Sucker Country."

Col. Ayres said his study of the "flight of the German mark" showed him that America was a "sucker country." Of 2,000,000,000 German marks sold throughout the world at a high rate of exchange, 700,000,000 were purchased in the United States on the assumption that the German people would recover their economic position, he declared. About 1,000,000 persons speculated in the mark, and about 200,000 were buyers in the United States, he added.

Advises Bankers to Accept.

He said his advice to American bankers would be to accept the Dawes plan with two modifications. These were, he explained:

"First, the proposed gold bank should be on a gold basis. Other European countries are jealous that Germany should be placed on a gold basis, but American financiers cannot be interested in a big loan to Germany unless it is guaranteed by the mark on a gold basis and not, as it is now, on a paper basis.

"Second, the bankers should insist upon a sliding scale for the reparations, according to Germany's ability to pay."

LIGHT STEEL CAR PROMISED U. S. BY SHOALS BIDDER

Washington, D. C., April 19.—Production of a metal which its sponsor claims would "revolutionize transportation" is one of the features of the Hooker-White-Atterbury proposal for operation of Muscle Shoals, it developed at today's hearing of the senate agriculture committee.

W. W. Atterbury, vice president in charge of operations of the Pennsylvania railroad and one of the principals in the bid, said the cheap power available at Muscle Shoals would virtually assure the practical production of this metal, which is made from an alloy of aluminum and magnesium.

The chief merits of the metal, Atterbury said, is that it is a strong, light metal which could be used as a substitute for steel in railroad cars and would permit the carrying of a heavier freight and passenger cargo.

Manufacture of the metal is now prohibitive, he said, because of the high cost of electric power, which is needed in the process. The metal was used in German Zeppelins during the war, he explained.

J. G. White, one of the three bidders, said their proposal would assure the production of fertilizer for the farmers at a lower cost than government operation because their corporation would be free from politics and would encourage initiative.

Francis R. Weller, a consulting engineer of Washington, D. C., said the Hooker bid was the only proposal that would return to the government at the end of the lease period all of the funds expended at Muscle Shoals and that the Ford bill was "indefensible from any standpoint."

Police, by Error, Kill Hero Who Nabs Holdups

Indianapolis, Ind., April 19.—Edward Gordon, 21, a switch tender, who captured two highwaymen who had attempted to hold him up, was shot and killed last night by Police Sergeant John Sheehan, who mistook Gordon for a third robber. One of the robbers then escaped, but the other was held. He gave the name of Robert Larue, 22, of St. Louis, and police say he admitted four recent holdups.

ENOUGH VOTES TO PASS BONUS OVER VETO, FORECAST

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., April 19.—[Special.]—Assertions that sufficient votes are assured to pass the soldiers' bonus bill over the veto of President Coolidge marked the opening of debate on the measure today in the senate.

The qualification was added, however, that the bill must be an insurance measure substantially as passed by the house and as reported from the senate finance committee. The adding of a cash option, as favored by the Democrats, it was stated, would mean that the bill cannot be passed over the President's veto.

Statements along this line were made by Senator Watson [Rep., Ind.] and by other Republican leaders in response to questions asked by Senator Robinson [Ark.], Democratic leader.

Legion for Insurance Bill.

That the American Legion desires the passage of the insurance bill and the rejection of the cash option was indicated in a letter sent to all senators during the day by National Commander Quinn.

"In the name of the ex-service men and women of the country, we ask your support of the bill as reported by the finance committee," Mr. Quinn said in the letter. "We believe that this bill can become a law, even over a veto by the President."

The approval given by Commander Quinn, who strongly opposed the cash proposal, more than anything else influenced the Democrats and those intending to support a cash bonus to abandon their position. The feeling exists now that the insurance bonus plan will be adopted by the senate and that it will go to the President without substantial change over the house bill.

Democrats to Yield.

It was indicated, therefore, by Senator Robinson and other Democrats that while they favor a cash option, they do not desire to block bonus legislation, and that they are inclined to support the insurance bill.

Senator Robinson directed numerous questions at the Republicans about the exact attitude of President Coolidge. The Republicans insisted they did not know anything as to the truth of reports that the President might sign the insurance bill. The Democrats said they had been given such an understanding by representatives of veterans' organizations, who had attributed the information to Republican senators.

Before the debate opened, Democratic senators in a conference attempted to reach an agreement as to their program with respect to a cash option. It was decided to leave the members free to vote for the cash option substitute or for the committee bill, according to their own judgment.

Senate Steps on the Gas.

The senate made unusually good progress in the consideration of the bonus bill. All committee amendments to the house bill were adopted, together with a few in addition, most important of which was a provision eliminating the exemption from civil service which was provided for certain experts of the veterans' bureau in administering the law. The civil service exemption had aroused protests from civil service organizations.

RAILROADS' FOUR BROTHERHOODS BACK LAFOLLETTE

Cleveland, O., April 19.—The fo big railroad brotherhoods will suppo Senator Robert La Follette [Rep. Wis.] for the presidency, it beca known here today. Warren S. Sto president of the Brotherhood of Lo motive Engineers, indicated today th while William G. McAdoo of Califo nia is undoubtedly popular with certain element among the railro men, the leaders of the brotherho organization will back La Follette f the presidency.

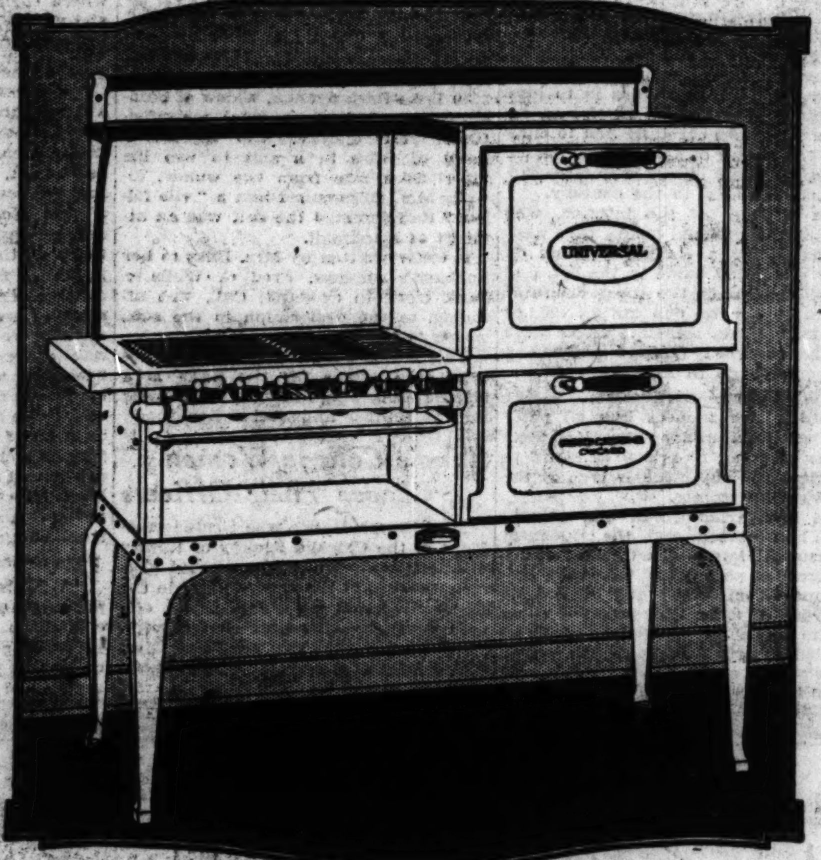
To match the high standard of the Hollywood-Kenmore APARTMENTS



Universal Gas Ranges Were Installed

The sanitary features together with its sturdy construction and beautiful appearance were the deciding factors in the selection of this new and finer gas range—UNIVERSAL—as standard equipment in the kitchens of this apartment building.

Its beauty is a distinct advantage. No woman's eye will miss its smooth, unbroken surfaces, its graceful lines, flush doors and immaculate finish. It is a selling point of great value. It gives the kitchen a modern touch that will help put the best kind of names on the dotted line of the lease. And the cooking and baking service it gives is just as superior as its physical charms.

Builders of the magnificent Marlborough, Embassy, Sheridan Lake and Sheridan Drive Apartments, South Shore View and hundreds of others have also modernized their kitchens with the UNIVERSAL.

Chicago, Illinois.

Gentlemen:-

Att'n: Mr. Frank W. Hatten,
Sales Engineer.

One of the most important pieces of equipment that an apartment hotel, either furnished or unfurnished, can have is an attractive and efficient gas range.

I feel that the kitchen equipment has played quite a large part in the unprecedented success of this unfurnished apartment hotel, and I am more than glad that we selected the Universal Gas Range for The Hollywood-Kenmore.

This range performs all its duties excellently and economically while at the same time presenting an unusually attractive appearance.

Yours very truly,

WORLD POLICY OF METHODISM TO BE VOICED

Bishops to Sift Problems at Springfield, Mass.

BY THE REV. W. B. NORTON.

The two chief branches of the Methodist Episcopal church, having a total membership of 8,000,000 and a constituency of at least 25,000,000 in all the principal nations of the globe, will meet in Springfield, Mass., May 1, and continue in session nearly the entire month.

BISHOP NICHOLSON

Bishop Thomas Nicholson of the Chicago area will leave for the east tomorrow morning. He will attend a meeting of the bishops of the church which will begin Wednesday at East Northfield, Mass. In addition to the bishops resident in the United States there will be present three bishops from Europe, two from Africa, three from China, four from India, one each from Japan and the Philippines.

Voice of the Church.

The bishops will review the work of the various areas for the last four years and give the finishing touches to the Episcopal address which will be presented to the general conference. It will give the consensus of opinion of the bishops concerning the attitude of the church on its world administration.

Bishop Nicholson will report that the Chicago area has had a net gain in membership of 25,373, which is 6,362 more than were reported four years ago, notwithstanding two Indiana conferences formerly in the Chicago area are now in the Indianapolis area. He will report the erection of 107 new church buildings, 95 new parsonages, and 14 new parish houses, an increase in property valuations of $6,802,339, exclusive of the new Chicago temple, which is valued at $7,000,000 additional. The benevolent contributions of the area have been $6,930,703.

Want Bishop Returned.

Bishop Nicholson has been unanimously invited by the conferences in the area to return for another four years and this request will be complied with unless the general conference takes drastic action limiting the terms of all bishops to eight years in one area, as advocated by some, or limiting the term of bishops in office to eight years as advocated by the radical group.

The delegates of the Chicago area will undoubtedly present the name of Dr. John Thompson, pastor of the Chicago Temple, recommending he be elected to the episcopacy.

One of the determining questions will be the action taken in regard to the union of the Methodist Episcopal church and the Methodist Episcopal church, south, which separated in 1844.

Four Vacancies.

There will be at least four vacancies. Bishop Frank M. Bristol of the Chattagoona area, formerly a Chicago pastor and well known here, will retire by reason of having reached the age limit, as will also Bishop William Burt of Buffalo. Bishop W. A. Quayle of the St. Louis area, formerly pastor of St. James church, Chicago, and Bishop Homer C. Stuntz, Omaha area, a graduate of Garrett Biblical institute, Evanston, will both retire because of ill health.

FIND MISSING MAN'S BODY.

The body of Allis Jones, 65 years old, 5845 Drexel avenue, missing since March 14, was found yesterday in the Jackson park lagoon. He had been despondent.

MAKE FINAL PLAN FOR RECEPTIONS OF MUNDELEIN

Plans for the receptions to be accorded Cardinal Mundelein both here and in New York will be completed tomorrow at a meeting of laity and clergy at the Chicago Athletic association. Mgr. Bona will preside, the laity being represented by D. F. Kelly and the clergy by Mgr. E. A. Kelly.

All the priests in the archdiocese—about 1,000—and 200 members of the hierarchy have been invited to attend a banquet at the Drake hotel on May 13. Father John F. Ryan, in charge of arrangements, announced. The congratulations of the clergy probably will be extended by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Edward F. Hoban.

Bishop Hoban yesterday received Easter greetings from the cardinal at the Holy Name cathedral. Preceding the banquet at the Drake, solemn pontifical mass will be held at Holy Name cathedral.

O, BOY! BEAUTY EXPERTS WILL SHOW YOU HOW!

Arrangements have been completed for the entertainment of 50,000 beauty experts and hairdressers from the middle western states, who will gather in Chicago next Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday for the convention and exposition to be held at the Hotel Sherman by the Chicago and Illinois Hairdressers' association, the first showing of its kind held in the middle west.

Nearly a hundred exhibitors will show equipment, methods, and stock which is of interest to the profession, and in addition daily lecture programs are planned.

Among the features open to the public will be a hairdressing contest open to any member of the profession, when more than fifty heads of hair will be dressed at the same time and prizes will be awarded. Bobbed hair, as well as long hair, will be dressed.

Paul Rilling is president of the association.

SANTA FE LOSES TEST CASE ON WORKING HOURS

Federal Judge Adam C. Cliffe yesterday ruled against the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé railroad in what has been considered a test case, ultimately affecting the working hours of 100,000 yardmasters and allied railway workers in the United States. The suit was brought to enforce the interstate commerce commission ruling limiting to nine hours the working day of every railway employé who receives or transmits train orders by telephone.

Attorneys pointed out that the measure is solely for safety and has no relation to any labor demands regarding "working conditions."

Judge Cliffe assessed a fine of $3,000 against the railroad company for resisting the order.

Attorneys for the railroad indicated they would appeal the case.

HUNGARY PICKS 5,700 MISFITS TO DUMP ON U. S.

Puts Dregs of Nation on Emigration List.

BY RAYMOND FENDRICK.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

BUDAPEST, Hungary, April 19.—The Hungarian government has started to draw up its notorious "emigration preference" list for the coming year.

If congress again sets the Hungarian quota at 5,700, this country will issue passports to 5,700 of the choicest lot of bolsheviks, political agitators, rabid Socialists, economic misfits, petty criminals, and undesirable Galician Jewish refugees that it can comb together in all Hungary, and will try to dump them into the United States.

The Hungarian government and all the governments of central and eastern Europe have been selecting this kind of emigrants for America for twenty or thirty years.

"Sewer Empties Into America."

"Our sewer empties into America," Hungarian police officials have often boasted.

The Hungarian government has just issued notice that all persons who wish to emigrate to the United States this coming fiscal year should send their applications. This process is to give the minister of labor a chance to examine all names carefully and to eliminate the names of all farmers, skilled mechanics, and others who are particularly essential to the country.

The minister of the interior, who controls the national police, then asks the police for a complete report on every remaining name in the list, and he will eliminate the most desirable emigrants one by one until 5,700, or the exact quota, remain. These 5,700 will be cheerfully given emigration passports to go to America.

Prison—or America.

Until a few months ago all petty criminals in Hungary were given their choice of going to prison or going to America, and the same is true of the old Austrian empire.

The Hungarian quota was exactly 5,700 last season and the Budapest government issued exactly that many immigration passports. When the season opened on July 1 and these 5,700 hand picked emigrants marched down to the American consulate and demanded American visas. Until a year or two ago every one of these preferred Hungarians could get a visa and godspeed, but owing to America's awakening only a part got through.

American congressmen intervened on behalf of some of these undesirable emigrants who were refused visas, and they forced the state department to reverse the consuls' decisions.

Through the issuance of passports the Hungarian government has always chosen the emigrants to go to America and the reason that many descent and respectable Hungarians have been able to arrive in the United States is because they have been able to bribe some official to sell them a passport for $100 or $200. It is absolutely forbidden that agricultural workers or skilled mechanics leave Hungary, and the government particularly tries to get rid of political agitators who are socializing the cities.

Consul All but Helpless.

The American consul here has practically no means for investigating the record of any emigrant. He must take everyone upon his appearance and the word of an interpreter.

The steamship companies have sold enough passages from Hungary for America to cover last season's Hungarian quota four times, and this means that the local steamship agents are bound to bring all pressure possible upon the consulate staff to get it to favor emigrants who hold their tickets.

If a steamship agent cannot get visas for his clients he gets the reputation of not having influence with the consulate, and he canont sell passages. Until recently American consulates in Europe were honeycombed with the influence of steamship agents of every nationality. These agents were constantly trying to bribe consular staffs to get visas.

LAWYER SUES RICH WIDOW FOR SLANDER

Eugene P. Quirke, an attorney, yesterday brought suit for $500,000 damages against Mrs. Helen Weck-Bliss, 3630 Lake Park avenue, widow of Samuel Bliss, millionaire steel manufacturer. Mr. Quirke, who represents heirs of Bliss in a suit to win his $2,400,000 estate from the widow, alleges Mrs. Bliss called him a "vile fellow" and asserted the suit was an attempt at blackmail.

A letter written by Mrs. Bliss to her husband's nephew, Fred C. Wells, a bank clerk in Oakland, Cal., was attached to the declaration in the suit, which is for libel and slander.

This letter declares the suit to reclaim the estate for the heirs is a blackmailing plan and forms the basis for the slander and libel action.

Illinois College Women Choose Their Officers

Miss Emma March was elected president of the Chicago Society of Illinois Women's Colleges at the annual election meeting of the organization in the Hotel Sherman yesterday. Other officers for the coming year elected were: Miss Helen Irwin, vice president; Miss Zerita Schwartz, secretary; Miss Helen De Witt, treasurer.

SAYS BURNS MEN RAISE RED SCARE TO BOOST JOBS

Civil Liberties Union Denies Moscow Aid.

New York, April 19.—[Special.]—Charges that the bureau of investigation of the department of justice has spread misleading propaganda concerning communist activities in the United States, "in order to maintain secert service men in their jobs and to get increased appropriations from congress," were contained today in a statement issued by the American Civil Liberties union, which is attempting to secure a reduction of the appropriation to the bureau in the appropriation bill pending in congress.

The statement of the Civil Liberties union, given out by Dr. Harry F. Ward, chairman, charges that: "Information given out to patriotic societies and others by irresponsible secret service agents has misled the public into a false belief as to the extent of communist activities in the United States. The Civil Liberties union, as a free speech organization, is engaged in defending communists where their civil rights are involved, and we are, therefore, in a position to know the facts.

Denies Communist Financial Help.

"It was even stated, for instance, to a representative of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE that the American Civil Liberties union was part of the communist movement and was subsidized by money received from Moscow through a New York lawyer. This TRIBUNE representative so reported in his articles on the Reds. Such a statement is wholly false.

"The Civil Liberties union has never received a single dollar, directly or indirectly, from any agent of the Russian government or the Third internationale, and the federal secret service knows that to be a fact. Nevertheless, these false reports concerning the relation of communist propaganda to free speech and pacifist movements are spread in order to maintain radical hunting detectives on their jobs and to agitate for increased appropriations from congress.

Says Burns Exaggerated Red Forces.

"William J. Burns recently appeared before the house appropriations committee advocating increased appropriations on this ground alone. He maintains that there are 600,000 communists in the United States, whereas by actual count the total membership of all the radical political movements is less than 50,000. He knows that his statement is bunk. So are the statements of secret service agents that Russian money subsidizes our free speech movement.

"The Civil Liberties union has defended and will defend communists whose civil rights are attacked, just as it defends all others similarly attacked, regardless of our attitude as to the ideas they advocate. We propose to do everything in our power in the present session of congress to curtail the activities of the bureau of investigation in interfering with the exercise of civil rights."

The appropriations bill to which the Civil Liberties union statement refers has passed the house and is pending in the senate, where hearings are scheduled for next week.

GUN TOTERS TO GRAND JURY.

John Shea and John Walker, both of 6629 North Francisco avenue, were held to the grand jury yesterday by Judge W. W. Ward of Park Ridge, Ill. Walker and Shea were arrested in Schiller Park, Ill., by the highway police. They both carried revolvers. Their bond was set at $10,000. According to the police both men have police records.

CHICAGO FACES SHORTAGE IN COMMON BRICK

Relief from the acute shortage of common building brick, which has lessened building activities and forced hundreds of bricklayers out of work during the last two weeks, loomed yesterday when Chicago brick manufacturers began to formulate plans to overcome the shortage within the next week or ten days.

In winter months the brick manufacturers usually stock their yards with large supplies of common brick to meet the spring building demand.

The common brick shortage was the main topic of conversation Friday night before the regular meeting of the Building Trades council. Business agents and other officials of building trades reported that members of their unions had been forced to quit work because of the insufficient supply of brick.

Many Smaller Jobs.

In addition there are a number of streets where less than a block is to be paved, and sundry alleys.

The Lincoln park commissioners have agreed to donate a strip about eighteen feet wide on the west side of the park between North avenue and Center street to widen Clark street. This will increase its width from 45 to 63 feet. The park commission insists that the city do the paving which President Sloan estimates at $61,000.

Salesmen Wanted BY A LEADER

The house inserting this advertisement is doing special work for the oldest, largest and most essential industry in this country. Its business is international in scope, including merchandising, banking, expressing.

Within recent years it has enjoyed a growth greater than that of all the competitors in its field combined. The branches maintained by this institution in the various cities have proven inadequate for the tremendous expansion which it has enjoyed.

This statement explains why we are organizing at this time a big campaign which will require the services of a number of salesmen.

If prestige means anything to you as a salesman, can you visualize this "set-up," and how much do you think you could earn handling a proposition in conjunction with such universal appeal?

Men who have the necessary qualifications can make a big, permanent success with us. If you feel that you are one of the men we are seeking, ask for an appointment. We will, if interested, arrange for a definite interview promptly.

As we do not wish to waste your time nor our own, we will frankly tell you whether we believe you have the necessary added qualifications to warrant leaving your present position for the big future we offer.

GUESTS EAT GLASS

ELLA SODUCK

The condition of several of the guests that attended a dinner in the home of Dr. I. Val Freedman, 5816 Kenmore avenue, in connection with which the maid, Ella Soduck, was arrested last night, is reported to be somewhat improved. Powdered glass was found in the flour from which bread was made and eaten by the diners.

The maid is being held at the Summerdale police station pending the outcome of the police investigation. She denied that she knew how the ground glass happened to be in the flour.

Mrs. Samuel Garfield, 2918 Pine Grove avenue, and her son, Russell, are reported to be seriously ill.

BOY WRITERS OF BEST LETTERS TO SEE BIG WAR

Picture Shows Yanks on Job "Over There."

BY SALLY JOY BROWN.

Not many days left, boys, to get your letters in for my big party at the war picture, "Powder River," next Saturday morning at the Monroe theater.

Letters mailed from Chicago and vicinity today, Monday, Tuesday, and early Wednesday will reach me in time to be considered.

"I'll start mailing invitations tomorrow morning to a hundred boys who wrote winning letters. The last big batch of invitations will be mailed Wednesday night—so get busy with your letters now, to be sure they'll reach me in time to be considered. The invitation is extended to boys from 10 to 15 years of age.

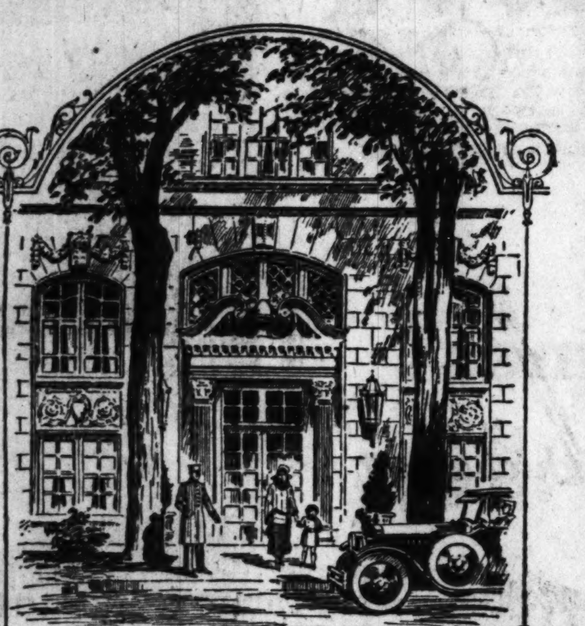
See History in the Making.

Remember what a treat you'll have and you can write a splendid letter. It's history in the making—real history, more thrilling than any "make-believe" picture could ever hope to be. I've told you some of the exciting things you'll see, and they are samples merely of the continuous thrills you'll have.

Just think—there's one complete scene of an American battery in action, and what happens when the German artillery gets the range. Shells burst all around the guns and the commander knows he'll have to move. The horses come galloping up, they limber the guns, and away they go. The German artillery peppers them, but they get away down the road and turn into another field to resume their hammering at the German lins.

As if You Had Been There.

Think of the thrilling moments those artillery men went through—then think how wonderful it is to see everything just as though you were there and I know you can write a winning letter. And don't forget—the boy who writes the best letter not only will see the show, but will win a splendid $165 receiving set, and the second best letter an $85 Zenith receiving set, donated by the Zenith Radio Corporation. The $165 one is the same set exactly as the one now being used by Capt. MacMillan, away up near the north pole, to keep in touch with the civilized world.



Can a Hotel Have Personality?

What is it that attracts people to THE ORRINGTON at Evanston—why do so many make their homes here in preference to any other apartment hotel?

Seeking the answer, a gentleman considering accommodations asked several guests why they selected quarters at THE ORRINGTON.

Their comments were interesting—"We feel at home at The Orrington because there are so many home people around us." "The Orrington is small enough to be exclusive, yet large enough to give us every modern apartment hotel facility." "If we had personally selected the furnishings they could not be more practical or elegant." "We have never lived in any apartment hotel where the spirit of service and endeavor to please was pleasanter than that we now experience at The Orrington."

The people are the personality of a hotel. They create either a favorable or unfavorable environment. One of the biggest reasons for the success of The Orrington is the splendid group of people who make this hotel their home.

Scholle's Good Furniture

JUDGING by the number of young couples who have been coming here lately, there are a lot of them getting ready to furnish a three or four-room apartment.

If you're in that situation, we have a special message for you. We've arranged three rooms—living room, dining room, bedroom—completely furnished with Scholle-quality furniture, at a cost of a little less than $800.00. We show in the illustration what the furniture looks like.

All the goods in this store are Scholle-quality; you can't buy better. The selections for these three rooms are not the most expensive goods we have; but they're as well made as any we have.

We are trying to make it a simple matter and at a moderate cost. If you move a little later into more commodious quarters, you can then add to your equipment with goods that will harmonize with these; you may have a larger living room or an extra bedroom to furnish then.

The pieces shown may not be just what you want, in which case we would suggest that you look over the list of specials below; or better still, come into the store and let us help you find just what you want.

All of our furniture is absolutely guaranteed to give complete satisfaction. If you don't think it does, let us know; we'll come and get it and refund your money, or help you find something else here.

For the benefit of those who live at some distance from Chicago, we wish to say that we are glad, in many instances, to make delivery direct to your home in our trucks. It saves a lot of packing and extra handling.

This evening at 8 o'clock two eminent educators will broadcast on the radio messages of the relation of this portrait to Americanism, and will make an appeal for a public response to "Dollar day," which Mayor Dever has proclaimed for Tuesday.

Scott to Speak.

Dr. Walter Dill Scott, president of Northwestern university, will speak this evening over THE TRIBUNE'S W-G-N broadcasting station at the Edgewater Beach hotel. At the same hour Superintendent of Schools William McAndrew will broadcast a similar message under the auspices of the Herald and Examiner WLS station from the Sears-Roebuck station.

In spite of the fact that Dollar day comes on Tuesday, on which a fee is demanded for entrance to the Art institute, Frank Logan, member of the board of directors of the institute, announced yesterday that this Tuesday will be a free day.

"We want it to be Chicago's day," said Mr. Logan, "just as we want the Washington portrait to be Chicago's own. We are hoping that large numbers of Chicagoans, in addition to giving their contributions, will give an even deeper meaning to Dollar day by coming to the Art institute and viewing the Stuart portrait."

The mayor's committee of seventy-five, under the direction of its chairman, Paul Schulze, has offered a $3,000 prize for a winning fifty word essay on "Why Chicago Should Have the Gilbert Stuart Painting." Additional prizes include a $250 radio set and paintings by two local artists, Frank V. Dudley and F. De Forrest Schook.

LEGION NOTES

The Rev. James M. Gray, president of Moody Bible institute, will address Advertising Men's post No. 38, American Legion, at the regular weekly luncheon, tomorrow at the Sherman hotel. His subject will be, "Why I Am Not a Pacifist." Robert Brown of WDAP, the radio station at the Drake hotel, will supply the entertainment. Advertising Men's post is bending every effort to win the cup for largest paid-up membership in Cook county. The contest closes May 9.

If you should win the first prize in the contest—which is the sum of $20,000—WHAT WOULD YOU DO WITH IT?

Ten dollars is being paid daily for the best letter and $5 for the second best letter received by THE TRIBUNE on "What I Would Do with the $20,000 if I Win It." Letters must not exceed 100 words. Address contributions to the Prize Letter Contest Editor, care THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, Tribune Square, Chicago, Ill.

Today's best letter, the $10 prize winner, follows:

Let me see. I am in college. Do I need money? I'll say I do. Twenty thousand? Read my check again. I got the prize? Read it again. Telephone that shop, Roomy, that I will take that suit, let the office know that I have decided to quit correcting papers and will give my time entirely to my studies. Phone the bank to come to me to get a deposit I wish to make. Go down the hall and tell Rose not to cry because she thinks she can't stay in school. She can finish her year out. Write my check for Marjorie's sorority dues and another for Evelyn's overdue board. Call all the Hall girls for a treat on me. O, boy, turn on a jazz piece on the phonograph. Dance faster! Faster! J. R.

Today's second best letter, the $5 prize winner, follows:

Finding the $20,000 added to my treasury would enable me to extend more liberal aid toward the deserving poor with whom I come in daily contact in my social work. A very few dollars carefully spread will often put an entire family on their feet.

A modest, cozy home where land is reasonable in price; fruit trees; a patch of garden with lots of chickens, and I could smile at the money grubbing landlords. If my children prove they can absorb a higher education the opportunity will be given them to acquire the best. A long deferred trip to the Atlantic seaboard on a short vacation visit to relatives and friends.

As insurance against rainy weather balance of cash would be invested in high class first mortgage bonds. No, no, no automobile. A family with a small income besides their salary should conserve the principal. Commuting is great fun. D. L. D.

BEG YOUR PARDON

The caption under the picture of Mrs. Louisa Kirwin Captron Thiers, published in THE TRIBUNE on Thursday morning, was misleading in that it says the D. A. R. "helps care for" her. Mrs. Thiers is cared for in every way by her daughter, Mrs. Charles Quarles of Milwaukee.

TUT SO FOND OF BEER HE TALKED OF IT IN HIS SLEEP

New York, April 19.—Howard Carter, discoverer of Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb and most of the glories of ancient Egypt, arrived in New York today on the Berengaria and refuted a libel on the personalities of the Pharaohs.

Everybody, from Marie Corelli to Conan Doyle, has insisted that those ancient monarchs and their assigns, their ministers, priests, and undertakers have projected through the ages a curse upon all who molest their bones and enjoined upon all to think of them with bated breath and reverence unto worship.

But not so, Howard Carter said. "There ain't no curse," said Mr. Carter, just like that. "I've worked in these tombs for thirty-four years and I've suffered much, but not from curses. It's the insects and the flies.

Kings Jolly Old Souls.

"And, really, those old kings were good old souls. Why, on every coffin there is inscribed an injunction as to how they felt about themselves. It reads:

"'Let all those who live life and hate death wish thousands of geese, bread, and beer to my soul.'

"That doesn't indicate a curse, does it? Did they have beer? Why, of course."

The archaeologist was accompanied by Dr. Percy White, professor of literature in the University of Cairo, who will assist him in twenty-four lectures in this country.

Tribute to Great Museum.

Mr. Carter paid a tribute to the help given the excavation of Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb by the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

The suit between him and the Egyptian authorities, he declared, is progressing satisfactorily, and he expects to continue excavations in the spring when he will enter the fifth chamber, wherein lies the young king's mummy.

BY FRANK SCHREIBER.

Cincinnati, O., April 19.—Elmer Jacobs, tall, [illegible] Seattle hurler, made his first start in the National league in some years today and his appearance was crowned with victory. Jacobs, who is no longer a youngster, showed the Cincinnati Reds some real jug-handle curves and in a hot pitching duel with Pete Donohue, the lanky Texas boy, came out on top, 2 to 1.

The contest was a pitching battle from start to finish, although Donohue was lifted for a pinch-hitter who failed to connect, in the eighth inning when it seemed as if the Reds were liable to break out and tie up the count. Jacobs was too strong, however, and the lone Cincinnati attempt was quickly snuffed out.

Four Hits for Each.

Each club made four safe hits, but it was a pair of three-baggers that brought the Cubs out on top and Capt. Ray Grimes and his mighty bludgeon were authors of both the runs. In the second inning Ray smacked a three baser down the first base line and he rode home a moment later when Hack Miller lofted a tall fly to Ed Roush.

The second Chicago tally came in the seventh session. George Grantham started it on its way after Adams had flied out. Grantham tripled past Roush and Duncan to left center, and had it not been for a perfect relay, George might have taken a chance and sped home.

A moment later Donohue ducked low when Grimes drove a vicious single to centerfield and Grantham came home in a romp.

Jacobs Holds Back Reds.

All the while Mr. Jacobs was turning the Reds back with neatness and dispatch. In the first seven innings, only three of the local gang reached first base and none of the trio lived to touch second. In the first session Grantham fumbled Roush's easy roller for an error with two out, but Jacobs fanned Duncan.

Sammy Bohne was the only Red to hit Jacobs in the first seven rounds, and both times he died at one end of a double play. In the second Bohne singled with one out, but Pinelli hit into a fast double killing on the Adams-Grantham-Grimes combination. Not satisfied with this, the Cincinnati boys repeated the performance again in the fifth, when Bohne got his second single with one out, and the Cubs were right there with the two ply out combination.

Pinch Hitter Pinched.

Then came the eighth and the Reds' lone tally and threatened rally. Two [illegible] were out when Pinelli singled to center. Caveney drove the ball between Heathcote and Statz for two bases and Pinelli came home. Then Harper was sent in to bat for Donohue, and with the fans in a near frenzy, imploring Harper for a hit, Jacobs fed him with fast high balls, one of which the Red pinch batter hoisted in an easy fly to Heathcote.

That was all, for Jacobs didn't waste a minute with the reputedly strong hitters at the head of the Reds' batting list in the ninth, and Tommy Sheehan, late of St. Paul, mastered the Cubs in their final chance.

Outside of the slip by Grantham the fielding was perfect. Time after time the rival outfielders dragged down long drives, while the infield defensive work was equally sharp. It seems Grantham is treating the fielding of easy ground balls with too much caution. [illegible] this caused him to slip once in the St. Louis series and in the game today, while he chased down hard [illegible] faultlessly.

In the Wake of the News

OLYMPIC TENNIS.

If Bill Tilden temporarily forsakes writing and becomes an "amateur" during the progress of the Olympic tennis tourney, we feel reasonably sure of an American victory. Even without him, the cause is not hopeless.

The Wake's interest, however, centers more in the appearance of Miss Helen Wills of California, our present national champion. After Mlle. Lenglen, French star, once decisively demonstrated her superiority over Mrs. Molla Mallory, former titleholder, we were convinced no subsequent meetings would reverse the result. For in addition to her prowess, Mlle. Lenglen had the advantage of youth, and Molla was unlikely to advance further after her many years on the course.

Miss Wills, in the opinion of experts, has not yet reached the height of her game. She will improve for several years more, although right now she is called the best prospect for world honors this country ever has presented. She has a well rounded assortment of strokes without notable weakness in any department. Whether she is yet the equal of the French girl is a question, somewhat a doubtful question.

There also are several good English players who may put out Miss Wills before the finals, although they have proved inferior in competition to Mlle. Lenglen.

Inability of American women tennis players to measure up to English and French standards has rather touched our pride. For this reason, The Wake is especially anxious for Miss Wills to make a creditable showing and eventually to bring world laurels for women to this country, supplementing the honors earned by our men players.

Any Fisherman to His???

Wish the wind was in the south,
Then the fishin' would be right.
(Hold this leader in your mouth,
Wet it good and—gosh, don't bite!)

Careful! Lordy, woman, Gee!
These poor fish have brains—they'll see Us first—and disappear—
Never'll land one in a year.

Guess I'll try a Grizzly King,
Had good luck with one last spring.
Holy mackerel! Gotta rise!
Now don't stand and criticize!

Grab the net and wade—'tain't deep!
Quick, slow poke. Good night, don't weep!
Golly, watch him run and dive.
He's a big 'un—man alive!

There, now, gently—he's a winner.
Weighs three pounds or I'm a sinner.
(Bless your heart, old sweet patoots,
Sure, I'll buy you some new boots.)

Glad you picked a Walton keen
In preference to a Jelly-bean? Nimrod.

Man o' War's Return?

If Man o' War is brought back to the races after an absence of four years to measure speed against the French Epinard, the experiment, even if successful, can add little to his established reputation. We accepted Man o' War for what he accomplished and at the time regretted his early retirement to the stud with a brilliant racing future still before him. There are other Yankee horses seemingly capable of comparing strides with Epinard. If Man o' War does come out, however, it will add greatly to public interest in the series of international races.

CLIMATE HERE BAD FOR "P. L.," PHYSICIAN SAYS

Won't Return Until Health Improves.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Frank L. Chance will not manage the White Sox this season; possibly never. Today, accompanied by Mrs. Chance, he is speeding back toward California to continue the battle for his health, leaving the task that fate denied him in the hands of Johnny Evers, who has carried the managerial burdens since the first day of spring training.

The famous P. L. started back to home and sunshine under orders from Dr. Phillip Kreuscher, the club's physician, who had him under observation for five days at Mercy hospital. Dr. Kreuscher reached his decision in the case yesterday morning and after he had talked with Chance the latter announced he would leave immediately. He departed last night on the California Limited.

Climate Is Blamed.

In a statement given out subsequent to Chance's announcement that he was going home, Dr. Kreuscher said that while conditions were not alarming, Chance would improve more rapidly away from the uncertain spring weather of this section of the country.

"Although there is some improvement in Chance's bronchial asthma, it is not sufficient to warrant his jeopardizing his complete recovery," said Dr. Kruescher. "This climate is not conducive to a cure of this type of asthma, which he will receive in a higher altitude and under more ideal climatic conditions."

As soon as Chance had agreed to give up his plan of taking charge of the Sox in the near future, he went into conference with Owner Charles A. Comiskey, also a patient at the same hospital.

Hold Sox Job for Him.

After the conference Secretary Harry Grabiner announced that Chance would continue to carry the title of manager, that the job would be open to him until such time as he might return and that in the interval Evers would have charge of the team on the playing field.

Chance's trouble started with a cold contracted here last December. Upon his return to California "flu" developed and affected his bronchial tubes. Failing to improve rapidly, he wired his resignation on Feb. 17, but instead of accepting it Owner Comiskey replied that the post would be held open until the P. L. might be able to report.

Chance immediately went back into the mountains in California and spent two weeks roughing it. He returned to Los Angeles a different man, and on April 7 started for Chicago. He arrived here a week ago last Friday, apparently sound as a dollar, but contracted a fresh cold that brought on a recurrence of the asthma. He went to the hospital and a sinus operation was performed, but the improvement was not satisfactory.

Plans Are Indefinite.

Chance has no definite plans for the future. He will go first to his home in Los Angeles and then probably back to the mountains. Later he may spend several weeks at the Grand canyon. When asked whether he didn't think he could return when the hot weather sets in, he said he would like to and possibly could, but that he didn't expect to appear as Sox pilot before another season rolls around.

Although lacking the title of manager, Evers will, to all intents and purposes, be just what the word implies, and it is the second time he has stepped into Chance's shoes. Back in the fall of 1912 when Chance and Charles Murphy, then Cub owner, came to the parting of the ways to end years of successful endeavor on the diamond, Evers, then a member of Chance's four time pennant winner, was tendered the place.

Another Chance for Evers.

Stormy petrel that he was, Evers was beset by trouble from the outset. Rows here and rows there marked his efforts to fight his way to the top, and at the end of the 1913 season he was turned loose. He signed with the Boston Braves and in 1914 did his share to startle the baseball world by the winning of a pennant and a world's series.

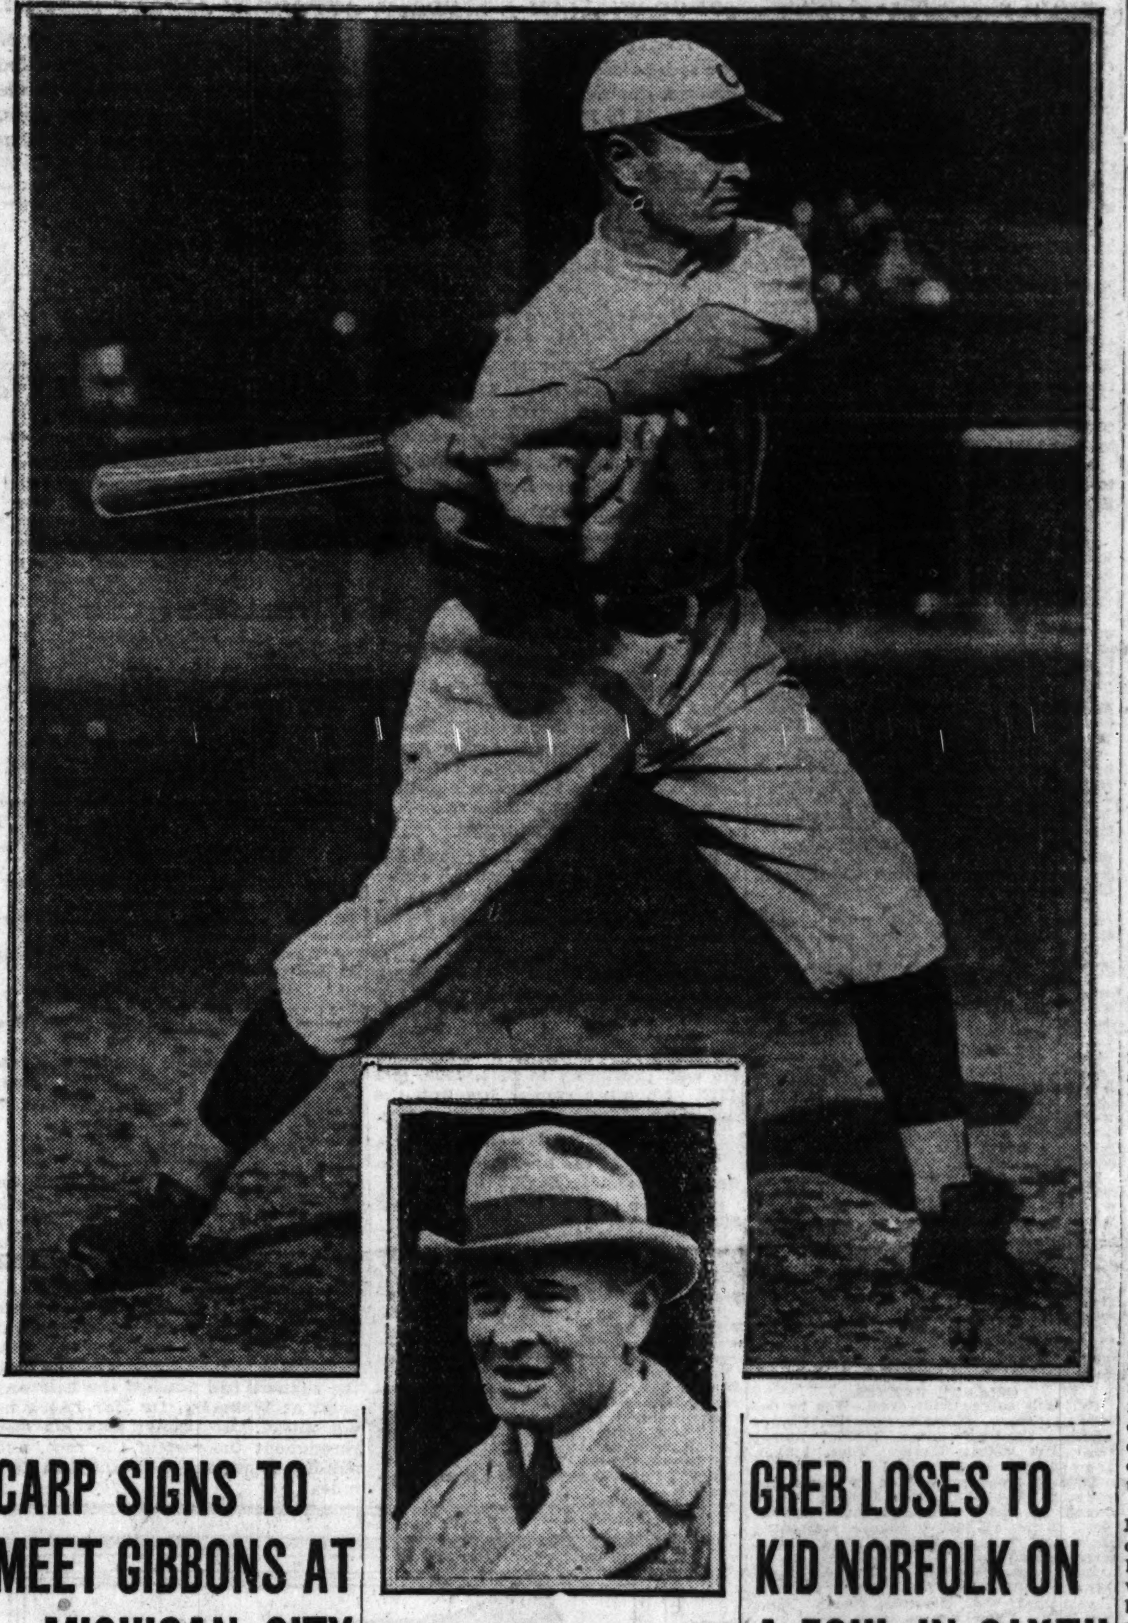
In 1921 Evers came back as pilot of the Cubs, but before the season was over he was relieved of his duties. In 1922 he was "in again," this time as coach of the White Sox, and went through the entire season without a fuss of any kind. He was a big help to Gleason that year.

Evers isn't the rip-snorting battler of a few years ago. Age has worked a great change in his temperament. He has mastered the knack of arguing with an umpire without getting the gate, and the young athletes think well of him because he'll sit around o' nights and school them on the fine points of the game.

Time of :09 4-5 Reported for Albert Washington

Albert Washington, colored freshman sprinter at the University of Chicago, is said to have stepped 100 yards at Stagg field in :09 4-5 yesterday. Three watches caught this time, according to Tom Eck of the Maroons' athletic staff.

LOST TO CHICAGO FANS



Frank Chance, on advice of his physician, will not take a chance of managing the White Sox the present season. The large photo shows the P. L. in his prime as a Cub and the inset pictures him as he appeared when he left here for the coast last night. Chance will recuperate at a California resort. Evers will guide the team pending result of Chance's convalescence.

CARP SIGNS TO MEET GIBBONS AT MICHIGAN CITY

PARIS, April 19.—[United Press.]—Articles for a 10 round no decision bout to be staged in Michigan City, Ind., May 30 or 31, between Georges Carpentier and Tommy Gibbons were signed here today.

Francois Deschamps, Carpentier's manager, signed for the Frenchman and Eddie Kane, Gibbon's manager, for the American. Jack Curley represented Floyd Fitzsimmons, the middle west promoter and matchmaker, and posted a forfeit of $15,000 binding the match.

Kane and Curley Arrive.

Kane and Curley arrived last night after making the trip on the Leviathan and after a short conference this morning the articles were signed.

After he had accepted the match for Carpentier Deschamps said there was nothing in the articles he signed to meet Gene Tunney during the week of June 16 that could prevent him from accepting any matches before that date.

Carp Gets $50,000

While the terms were not made known, it was understood that Carpentier was guaranteed a purse of $50,000, with an option on a percentage of the gate receipts.

Curley said that he and Kane would sail as soon as possible for the United States.

FITZ MAKES HIS PLANS

The ten round contest between Georges Carpentier and Tommy Gibbons, St. Paul heavyweight, closed in Paris yesterday, will be staged in the open air arena in Michigan City, Ind., about fifty miles from Chicago, on May 31, Floyd Fitzsimmons, matchmaker for the syndicate promoting the contest, announced.

Fitzsimmons said the date of May 30 announced from Paris probably was an error, as he figures on staging the contest the following day, although Jack Curley, who is representing him, may have agreed to a change in the date.

Beat Gibson to It.

Curley, together with Eddie Kane, manager of Gibbons, sailed for France a week ago to straighten out a controversy over the French boxer's privileges.

The Michigan City arena is an amphitheater dug out of the sand on the shores of Lake Michigan, and has a seating capacity of about 27,000.

Paul Fritsch, 1920 Olympic games champion and now star lightweight in the Descamps stable, signed with Curley to fight in the semi-finals on the same card with Carpentier in America, Fritsch meeting Sammy Mandell, and later fighting Bennie Leonard in New York on July 4.

GREB LOSES TO KID NORFOLK ON A FOUL IN SIXTH

Boston, Mass., April 19.—Kid Norfolk of New York, colored light-heavyweight, won from Harry Greb, middleweight champion, on a foul in the sixth round of their scheduled ten round bout here tonight. The boxers engaged in an unofficial fight when Greb struck Norfolk after the bell had rung, ending the round.

No championship was involved in the bout, which was at catch weights. Norfolk outweighed Greb by about ten pounds.

From the outset Greb and Norfolk fought viciously, hitting and clinching, but doing little boxing. From time to time each held the other's head and delivered savage punches with the free hand. In the second round Norfolk pushed the middleweight champion through the ropes and out of the ring.

Just after the bell sounded, ending the sixth round, Greb landed a wild swing to the head, and the two boxers flew at each other, swinging furiously. The referee vainly tried to separate them, the seconds joined in the fray, and the scene in the ring resembled a battle royal. A pop bottle, contributed by a spectator, landed harmlessly on the canvas as the boxers were forced to their corners, and the bout was awarded to the Negro.

BOSTON STANDS FALL; FOUR HURT

Boston, Mass., April 19.—Four baseball fans were crushed and trampled this afternoon when a portion of a gate to the bleachers at Fenway park gave way under pressure from the baseball crowd. All four victims were removed to hospitals, two being badly hurt. One man suffered several fractured ribs and a boy of 16 suffered a fractured knee.

New York Rooters Escape.

New York, April 19.—Two trolley cars loaded with baseball fans homeward bound from the Polo grounds narrowly escaped destruction late today when part of a superstructure of a Harlem river bridge near the ball park collapsed.

Hundreds of persons who saw the steel girdles topple, were panic stricken. Trolley wires were torn from their supports for the distance of a block east of the bridge. No one was injured.

DECISION PUTS OFFICIAL O. K. ON ORAL BETTING

Dismisses Test Case as No Violation.

OFFICIALS SELECTED

The list of officials to handle the summer race meeting at Hawthorne were announced last night from Columbus, O., by General Manager Joseph A. Murphy of the Chicago Business Men's Racing association, who is acting as steward at the meeting now in progress there.

Working with Judge Murphy as stewards will be S. C. Nuckols of Kentucky, Herman P. Conkling of Maryland and C. T. Essig, Chicago. James Milton of Maryland will do the starting, John Carey of New Orleans will serve as placing judge, Francis Dunne of Lexington, Ky., will be clerk of the scales, A. T. Blanchard of New Orleans, paddock judge, and Clint C. Riley of Chicago, official handicapper.

John Irwin, the Chicago packer, has been announced as chairman of the clubhouse membership organization committee.

BY FRENCH LANE.

The so-called oral betting system now practiced at race tracks in New York and Louisiana is not a violation of the Illinois anti-betting laws, according to a decision handed down in Criminal court yesterday by Judge William J. Lindsay. The decision was in the case of an alleged bookmaker and bettor arrested at the Hawthorne track during the race meeting there last summer.

The case so clarifies the Illinois anti-betting laws that it will give to Chicago the chance to conduct thoroughbred racing on the same elaborate scale as now offered in New York, according to claims of officials of the Chicago Business Men's Racing association last night.

What Court Holds.

Judge Lindsay held that the mere passing of a slip of paper from one individual to another on which certain notations were written, along with the name of a horse taking part in a race on that particular day's program and on the same premises, was not sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction under the Illinois laws.

Assistant State's Attorney Frank Matousek, who prosecuted the case declared after the decision had been handed down that he did not know what the attitude of his office would be on such cases arising at Chicago race tracks in the future. "Had we been able to show evidence of conversation pertaining to betting in connection with the exchange of the card I think we would have secured a conviction," he said.

The arrest which brought yesterday's decision and which many believe will restore thoroughbred racing here was made at the Hawthorne track on last July 12. Jacob Lipsitz was the person arrested after officers had detected him in the act of passing a card to David Seymour, who was arrested at the same time and charged with bookmaking.

What the Card Showed.

On the card was written the name Missouri Boy, a horse which was running on that afternoon's program. Under the name were the figures 20-6-2 with three ones under each of these figures. At the bottom of the card were the initials J. L. L. It was alleged by the prosecutors that it had been the intentions of Lipsitz to wager $1 to win, place and show on Missouri Boy at the odds of 20 to 1, 6 to 1, and 2 to 1.

Seymour, following his arrest on the charge of bookmaking, was held to the grand jury. He was represented by Attorney Albert Sabath, legal director of the Chicago Business Men's Racing association. The case came before last month's grand jury and a no bill was voted.

In the meantime Lipsitz had been taken before Justice Sandusky in Cicero and was fined $10 and costs under the gaming law.

Assigned to Lindsay's Court.

This case was appealed by Attorney Sabath to the Criminal court. It was assigned by Chief Justice John R. Caverly to the court of Justice Lindsay. The evidence was heard last Wednesday, Judge Lindsay reserving his decision until yesterday, when he discharged the defendant and handed down his opinion which in effect upholds the oral betting system as practiced at racetracks in New York.

The importance of the decision to the future race activities in Chicago is best shown in the announcement immediately following it by the Chicago Business Men's Racing association of a fifty-one day meeting at Hawthorne track, opening on July 3 and closing on Labor day.

Brings Back Old Days.

It is the most extensive racing program mapped out in Chicago since the last historic American Derby was run at old Washington park in 1904. The season at Hawthorne is to be featured by a revival of the Chicago Derby to be run July 12 and which will carry an added value of $15,000, and by July 4 and Labor Day stakes offering purses of $5,000.

It is the first constructive step in the permanent restoration of thoroughbred racing in the state of Illinois, Attorney Sabath declared.

"It is also the first expression we have ever been able to procure from any court of record," he said, "and the first time we have been able to introduce a case which typically sets before the court the oral betting system."

No Purse Less Than $1,000.

It was also announced that throughout the coming meeting at Hawthorne there will be no purse offering less than $1,000 and that each day's program will include a $1,500 feature race. This will compare favorably with the programs offered in New York, it was pointed out by Attorney Sabath.

Following the closedown of Chicago racing in 1904 Washington park was dismantled in 1906. A feeble attempt to revive the game was made in 1916 at Hawthorne, when a short meeting was held.

Again in 1922 a strong movement was started to restore the sport, and with the backing of many of Chicago's sportsmen and business men a short meeting was held at Hawthorne in the fall.

The first meeting of any consequence came last year, however, when, under the operation of the Illinois Jockey club, a twenty-five day meeting was held at Hawthorne. This attracted many of the good horses of the country, the unbeaten Sarazen making the first start of his career during the meeting. In Memoriam, which later gained fame by beating Zev, won the Illinois Derby.

Meeting Shows Loss.

No legal footing had been secured at the time on the oral wagering system, and the meeting resulted in a heavy financial loss, most of which went toward the improvement of the track, it was claimed by General Manager Thomas E. Bourke of the Illinois Jockey club.

During the last winter Hawthorne passed from the control of the Illinois Jockey club into the hands of the Chicago Business Men's Racing association, whose organizers were Joseph A. Murphy, the turf official; Charles T. Essig, secretary, and Albert Sabath, legal representative.

They immediately took steps to get their test case before a court of records, and the decision yesterday was the result.

HINSDALE WINS SECOND TRACK MEET OF YEAR

Capt. Borsom of Hinsdale led his team to an overwhelming victory over Glenbard and Downers Grove in a triangular track meet at Hinsdale yesterday. The final score was Hinsdale, 98; Glenbard, 21; Downers Grove, 7. The Hinsdale men allowed only two events to get away from them. They took thirteen firsts. This is the second meet of the season in which Borsom has taken more than 25 points and the individual honors. A driving rain marked the last half of the meet.

RECORDS BROKEN IN RUNNING OF KANSAS RELAYS

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Lawrence, Kas., April 19.—[Special.]—In a great set of games, during which records in all but four events for the carnival were broken, the University of Kansas relays today made athletic history in this section.

University of Texas relay team established a new American and national intercollegiate record for the medley race. The boys from the Lone Star state stepped the distance in 7:38 2-10. This mark broke the American record of 7:44 4-10 made by the Irish-American A. A. team of New York in 1909. The national intercollegiate record of 7:45 5-10 was made by the Texans in the same games last year.

Next to the wonderful performance of the Texas team was the great running of Occidental college boys from California. These teams, coached by Joe Pipal, a pupil of A. A. Stagg at University of Chicago, won five relay races.

Besides the feats of the Texas and Occidental athletes there were some other great performances for so early in the season. Paul Jones of De Pauw university did 24 feet 6⅞ inches in the broad jump, a highly creditable piece of work. Earl McKown of Emporia State Teachers' college cleared the bar in the pole vault at 13 feet ½ inch.

Oberst of Notre Dame threw the javelin 197 feet 6 inches, while Red Erwin of Kansas Aggies won the century in even time.

In the final event of the day, the one mile university relay, Iowa won by two yards from Dartmouth.

Northwestern won a creditable victory in the two mile university relay. Summaries:

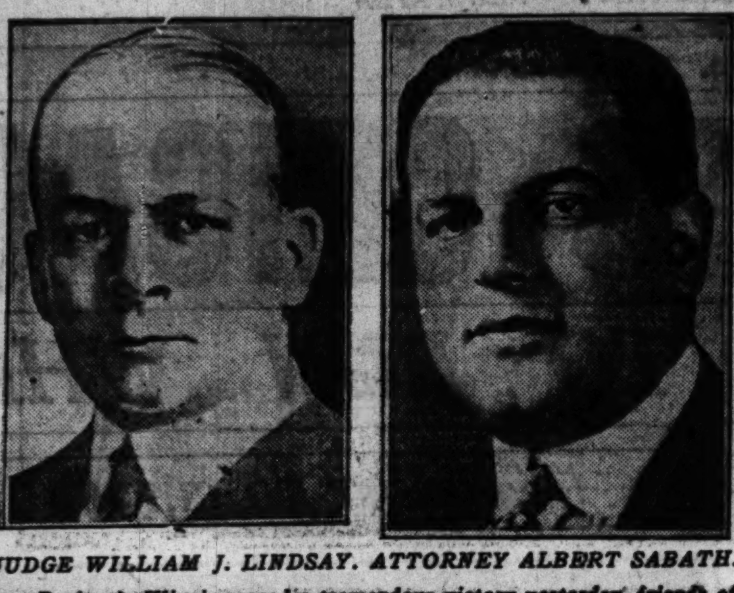
VICTORY FOR RACING



JUDGE WILLIAM J. LINDSAY. ATTORNEY ALBERT SABATH.

Racing in Illinois scored a tremendous victory yesterday, friends of the sport claim, when Judge William J. Lindsay in Criminal court handed down a decision in which he held that oral betting as practiced at the racetracks in New York is not contrary to the Illinois anti-betting laws. Attorney Sabath, acting for the Chicago Business Men's Racing association, made the fight which brought the court ruling.

De Mar Smashes Marathon Marks, Winning Again at Hub

Boston, Mass., April 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—The Olympic and American Marathon records were broken today when Clarence P. De Mar of Melrose, raced in far ahead of the field and won the twenty-eighth American Marathon conducted by the Boston Athletic association. He covered the Olympic distance of 26 miles 385 yards, from Hopkinton to Boston, in 2:29:40 1-5. This was the final test for candidates for the American Olympic Marathon team.

The Olympic record of 2:32:35 4-5 was made by Hannes Kolehmainen at Antwerp in 1920. Frank T. Zuna of Newark, N. J., held the former American record of 2:41:29 2-5, which he made winning the Baltimore Marathon last month.

Zuna Forced to Quit.

Zuna, who also won the recent Detroit Marathon, started in today's race under the colors of the Millrose A. A., New York, but stomach trouble forced him to drop out.

The ease with which De Mar won is shown by the fact that he finished more than five minutes ahead of Charles L. (Chuck) Mellor, Illinois A. C., Chicago, who was second. It was De Mar's fourth victory in this event. He won previously in 1911, 1922, and 1923. No other runner has won the American Marathon more than twice.

How They Finished.

The times of the first eleven men to finish were:

1. Clarence H. De Mar, Melrose; 2:29:40 1-5.
2. Charles L. Mellor, Chicago; 2:35:04 2-5.
3. Frank E. Wendling, Widlon A. C., Buffalo; 2:37:40 2-5.
4. William J. Churchill, Olympic club, San Francisco; 2:37:52.
5. Carl W. A. Linder, Boston A. A.; 2:40:12 2-5.
6. Victor Macauley, Windsor, N. S.; 2:40:36 2-5.
7. Ralph A. Williams, Quincy; 2:41:58 3-5.
8. William J. Kennedy, Cygnet A. C., Port Chester, N. Y.; 2:43:03.
9. Louis Tikkhanen, Finnish-American A. C., New York; 2:46:31.
10. Speros N. Merageas, Millrose A. A., New York; 2:50:49.
11. M. J. Dwyer, Mohawk A. C., New York; 2:50:51.

Kennedy won the American Marathon in 1917, and Linder in 1919. Zuna, the fourth former winner who ran today, came in ahead in 1921.

De Mar Lays Back.

De Mar played a waiting game for the first half of the race, conserving his strength. When a few leaders began to string out ahead of the bunch, it was Tikkanen who set the pace for the field of 140 runners.

At South Framingham, a little more than six miles from the start, and at Natick, four miles further along, Tikkanen was in the lead, but by the time the runners had reached the half way point at Wellesley, De Mar had gone out ahead. He maintained his lead throughout the rest of the race, and steadily increased it in the last few miles.

William J. Churchill, San Francisco.
Carl W. J. Linder, Boston.

Sixth place will be contested for by Frank T. Zuna, Newark, N. J., and Ralph A. Williams, Quincy.

ILLINOIS BEATS U. OF CALIFORNIA IN TRACK MEET

Berkeley, Cal., April 19.—Winning seven of the nine track and two of the six field events, University of Illinois defeated University of California in an intersectional dual meet here today, 72⅓ to 58⅔.

Evans of the visitors reigned supreme in the dashes, Flashing took firsts in the century and furlong, although California took second and third in both events. Evans traveled the 100 yards in :10 and negotiated the 72 1-3 to 58 2-3.

Illini Man Disqualified.

In the longer runs, the Illini's string of victories was broken only by Chase of California, who carried off first place in the half mile. In this event, Graham of Illinois came in second, but was disqualified for interference, Kitts, California, getting his place.

Coach Gill's boys scored a slam in the quarter mile when Fessenden, Koonz and Carter finished in the order named. The winner's time was :50 7-10. Another slam was recorded for the Illini in the two mile run in which Mieher came first, Marzulo second, and Makeever third. Mieher made the distance in 9:51.

California made clean sweeps in the discus throw and shot put.

Illinois scored 51 points in the track events and 21 1-3 in the field events, while California made 26 in the track races and 21 1-3 in the field.

FOR PLAYERS OF WHIST by A. R. METCALFE

PLAY BY RULE ALONE BRINGS DOWNFALL.

RIGID adherence to rules is impossible in a game which has so much variety as auction bridge. The opening lead should almost always be made according to rules, but from the moment the cards in dummy are exposed a player's mind must keep working if he intends successfully to match his wits against those on the other side.

The deal which follows shows how a player lost a rubber merely by adhering to one of the soundest rules in the game.

West secured nine tricks, game, and rubber.

North was not deceived by west's false card at trick one, and at trick four switched to the queen of diamonds. It was proper for him to lead the diamond suit and the queen was the conventional play from the combination which north held. Nevertheless, the play was bad and lost the rubber. The manner in which north should have reasoned is as follows:

West is certain to make four tricks in hearts, two in clubs, and one in spades; if west has both the ace and king of diamonds, game is gone, therefore I must give my partner credit for one of those cards.

This reasoning would have compelled north to start his diamond suit from the bottom and west could not have won two tricks in the diamond suit.

The end play of west was clever, as he correctly placed in north's hand at trick nine the guarded jack of diamonds, two clubs, and a singleton spade, and was careful to extract the spade before throwing the lead with the queen of clubs.

South should not have discarded both his diamonds at tricks seven and eight, but his play did not happen to affect the result.

The next deal shows how a player may lose a game by discarding one of an established suit even when he holds no card or reëntry and knows his partner to be devoid of that suit.

West secured nine tricks.

Although west found east with a good no trump hand, he could see only eight tricks in the combined hands, owing to the fact that there was no long suit to develop in either hand.

It was possible to secure game only through an error on the part of the adversaries, and this occurred at trick nine, when north let go of a club. The declarer had led the two commanding diamonds in the hope of coaxing this very discard and immediately led the club at trick ten.

At this point north failed to show the same degree of ability as west was using. The game might have been saved had north refused to make the queen of clubs and led the spade to his partner at trick eleven.

As it was, south was forced to a fatal discard at trick eleven, and west secured the other two tricks. Had south discarded the queen of diamonds, west of course would have thrown the nine of spades and still made the other two tricks. This kind of play occurs in almost every rubber.

HOW MUCH FOR A RACE HORSE?

Fortune Winners Bought for a Song.

It's not uncommon for a race horse who has seen his day to be shuffled off to some horse dealer for practically nothing, but there are some far more interesting yarns told about horses picked up for a little small change and developed later on into winners.

Take the case of R. T. C. In 1911 he cleaned up everything in sight on the big time tracks. And that campaigner was once an ordinary plowhorse! During his prime he hung up a mark of 2:06¼ trotting.

The farm boys who drove R. T. C. learned he had plenty of speed along the country roads. He began by beating a lot of nags with nice pedigrees and then some one took a squint at him and said that he looked like a good prospect, and with more training and patience he came to the Grand Circuit and proved a sensation.

Here's another good story. This is the 1922 world's champion pacing mare, Margaret Dillon, record, 1:58¼. She was bought for $100 as a yearling.

That's not all, either. Her present owner has refused offers that only rich men can make.

The story in connection with Margaret Dillon makes good reading. A. B. Coxe of Paoli, Pa., who has a big farm on the Main Line near Philadelphia, raised Margaret Dillon. When she was given a little training, Margaret showed a tendency to pace, and Mr. Coxe is a strong exponent of trotters. So Margaret was sold to J. Kernan, of Narberth, Pa., as a yearling for something like $100. But Kernan knew she was bred well, having as her sire Dillon Axworthy, with a record of 2:10¼ as a three-year old.

Kernan had the mare trained and as a two-year old Margaret Dillon was marked in 2:27. Then he sold her for $600 to C. H. Traiser, Boston, Mass.

Traiser knew she would become a fast one and he placed her in the hands of Tommy Murphy, who sent Margaret Dillon to her fastest mark at Lexington, Kentucky, last October when he timed her a mile in 1:58¼.

It is doubtful if $40,000 would buy her now.

LONGEST SINGLE ON RECORD

Player Only Makes First on Liner that Hits Bleacher Wall.

The longest single hit ever made in New York City was made at the Yankee Stadium on June 8, 1923, by Bib Falk of the White Sox.

Falk lashed the ball to the bleacher wall in left center. For a moment it looked like a homer.

Bib is a lightning runner but as he neared first he spread-eagled in the mud. However, he scrambled to his feet and tore for second without the formality of touching first. Evidently he was very much excited, for halfway to second he fell again. Then his failure to touch first seemed to dawn on him, for he turned around and sprinted back. By that time the ball was coming in so Bib stayed on first.

Years ago, Art Fromme made a similar hit at the Polo Grounds when he was pitching for the Giants, but the hit was not quite as long as Falk's.

BABE IS CHASED FROM GAME AS YANKS LOSE, 7-2

Washington, D. C., April 19.—[Special.]—Miller Huggins' star pitching staff had a tough time today against the Senators. Pennock, Sam Jones, and Waite Hoyt all looked alike to the Griffmen. The Sentaors romped in rather easily with a 7 to 2 victory. Joe Martina, the veteran recruit from the New Orleans club, held the Yanks safe throughout. Martina fanned Ruth on three pitched balls in the fifth inning, and after walking a batter also fanned Pipp and Ward.

The last strike was called on Ruth, who threw his bat in the air and was banished from the park by Umpire Evans. Score:

CUB NOTES

CINCINNATI, O., April 19.—[Special.]—Leo Hartnett is all het up. Leo's home town newspaper has printed a story of his secret wedding and this morning on arrival he received a letter from home calling for an explanation. No, girls, he isn't married—not yet.

Eppa Jephtha Rixey, left hand ace of the Reds' staff, is unable to toil. An infection in his right leg will keep him inactive for a couple of weeks.

Smiling Jack Hendricks was right on the job. He has a number of friends on the Cubs and told them all his Reds were out to cop four straight. Killefer's boys refused to be bluffed.

Three more wives of players joined the tourists here today. The latest arrivals are Mesdames Grover Alexander, Ray Grimes, and Andy Lotshaw. Mrs. Heathcote and Mrs. Keen joined the brigade in Kansas City last week.

Catcher Bubbles Hargrave of the Reds, who was bothered for the last three seasons by sore feet, apparently has recovered from his ailment. He stepped around in a peppery fashion and was able to run at top speed.

Rain started to sprinkle at the end of the Cubs' third inning and the fans sought shelter for a few minutes.

Redland field has been enlarged some 3,000 seats by the installation of field boxes. The boxes made it hard for the catchers to snare foul flies.

CITY AND STATE BICYCLE RACE DATES SELECTED

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Following the announcement of THE TRIBUNE'S annual bicycle derby in Humboldt park on May 25, A. R. Jacobson, chairman of the national and district championship committee of the Amateur Bicycle League of America, has named the dates and schedules for the city elimination trials, state finals and national amateur road championship for the year.

City elimination trials in the various states will start July 12, and continue through July 27. The competition will be divided into two classes, junior and senior. Junior events will be open to all riders under 16 years of age, and the senior to those 16 years and over. The state finals in both divisions will start on Aug. 9 and continue until Aug. 17.

In the city eliminations Jacobson's committee voted to permit trials to be held whenever most convenient to those in charge, but they must not be held later than the date specified. The same is true of the state championships.

National Events in Buffalo.

The national championships will be held Sept. 5 and 6 for both classes in Buffalo, N. Y. The events will be sponsored by the Buffalo Evening News, which will award elimination, state, and national championship medals. The elimination medal will be awarded to every registered A. B. L. of A. rider who competes in the various city elimination tests. Such a procedure will be a duplication of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE awards last year, when the championships were held.

The series of events in each class will consist of four races. The junior competition will include quarter, third, and two mile scratch races and one mile unpaced against time. Points will be awarded on the basis of 5 for first, 3 for second, 2 for third, and 1 for fourth. The highest score will determine the winner of the elimination and those having the two highest totals will be eligible for the state championship, which will be governed by the same rules. Winners of the state titles will have their expenses paid to Buffalo and return by the national championship committee.

Expect 35 States in Finals.

In the senior class the competition will include one-third mile, one mile, and ten mile scratch races and a five mile unpaced event against time. Same conditions will govern the senior races as prevail in the junior. It is expected at least thirty-five states will be represented, the largest in the history of the national championships.

Julian T. Fitzgerald, western representative of the Amateur Bicycle League of America, has charge of district 5, which includes the states of Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. Riders can secure further information by communicating with Fitzgerald at 2846 West North avenue.

Entry blanks for THE TRIBUNE'S Derby will start to appear on the sporting pages next Sunday. Full instructions will be printed on the blanks. The nominations will close on May 13.

NEW BODY PLANS AUTO RACES AT HAWTHORNE

Efforts to make Chicago the dirt track auto racing metropolis of the world were yesterday revealed in an announcement from the National Motor Speedway association, which has secured an exclusive lease for the motor racing privileges of the Hawthorne track for the entire season of 1924. This does not conflict with the horse racing schedule for the same track.

Sportsmen who contend they see the dirt track gradually superceding the board ovals in popularity throughout the country have been drawn into this new auto racing association. It is their aim to bring together at Hawthorne in a series of races prominent drivers who have won fame on dirt tracks of the country in recent years, settling many disputes and giving fans an opportunity to see these top notchers pitted against one another. The exhibition idea is to be tabooed and real championship events put on to determine the leaders in the sport.

Heading the new association as president is John Owen, lawyer and former assistant state's attorney of Cook county. Sam A. Bernbach, secretary and treasurer, is a prominent south side real estate dealer who for many years has been a patron of dirt track auto racing. He has purchased from Louis Chevrolet what he believes is one of the fastest racing cars in the country, which will be driven by one of the leading drivers.

Gustave Engstrom, who knows auto racing from the triple angle of racer, mechanic and official, is vice president and manager.

"It is our aim to bring to Chicago all the stars of the dirt track and let them fight it out here for the championships," said President Owen yesterday, "and we will insist on popular prices for all our races."

TRY OUT CARS TODAY

A number of Chicago's leading automobile road racers will tune up their cars for the coming season at the polo grounds, Lincoln avenue and Peterson road, this afternoon. More than half a dozen pilots, including Frank Nichols, Harry Dunn, and George Beck, will be on hand to take the kinks out of their engines. Dunn, it is said, has a new imported French car with an unpronounceable name, but with unlimited speed, which he plans to try out.

WATERLOO, Ia., April 19.—What may be the oldest baseball in existence will be thrown over the plate here May 1 when Waterloo and Cedar Rapids clash in the opening game of the Mississippi Valley league season. The ball was made after the requirements of 1854, weighs six ounces, and is three inches in diameter.

LEWIS' CROWN IS AT STAKE IN ROMANO MATCH

Ed "Strangler" Lewis, world's heavyweight champion, who will defend his title against Michael Romano, the Italian, in the feature of the wrestling show to be conducted by Ed White and Joe Coffey in the Coliseum on April 29, is about ready to follow in the footsteps of Johnny Meyers, according to close followers of the game.

When Meyers lost his middleweight championship to Joe Parelli at Milwaukee recently fans thought Johnny was about invincible in the 158 pound division.

Bell Saves Title.

In his recent matches Lewis has not shown the cunning and stamina which have made him practically invincible for three years. In his two matches with Stanislaus Zbyszko the champion did not look any too good. Against Renato Gardini in Philadelphia, expiration of the two hour time limit was all that enabled him to hold the crown. In this match Lewis won the opening fall with a head lock, but Gardini took the second with a series of cruel toe locks.

The match between Lewis and Romano will be a battle of head locks. The champion has won the larger percentage of his bouts by successful application of the bone crusher and the same is true of the Italian in his recent starts. Some of the grapplers who have met both men declare the Italian is just as efficient with the lock as the champion.

Romano Uses Head Lock.

It will be the second meeting between Lewis and Romano. The champion won the first match after an interesting struggle. The first fall went nearly an hour and Lewis finally won with a head lock. During the second fall Romano head locked the champion repeatedly and at times made Lewis run for the ropes to escape further punishment.

Romano has been training in New York, where he has been practicing methods of resisting the head hold as well as improving his application of the lock.

Lewis will receive a flat guarantee of $10,000, with a privilege of 60 per cent of the gross receipts. In addition he will put up the diamond studded belt emblematic of the championship. In order to clinch the match prominent local Italian sportsmen will make good the difference between Lewis' demand and the offer of the promoters, who refused to give the champion more than a $7,500 guarantee, with a privilege of 50 per cent of the receipts.

Seats now being used for the circus will be available on the night of the match. The ring will be pitched in the center of the floor, with most of the adjoining seats elevated. Prices of $1 and $5 will prevail.

The Inquiring Reporter

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question.

The Tribune will pay $5 for each question accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter," Chicago Tribune. For today's question James Economos, 2400 Chicago avenue, was awarded $5.

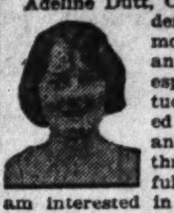
The Question.

What big sport event would you like to attend this summer?

Where Asked.

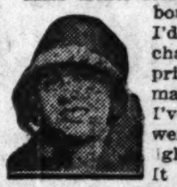
Clark, at 14th street.

The Answers.



Adeline Dutt, Chicago Heights, student—I would travel almost anywhere to see any big racing event, especially the Kentucky Derby. I attended the Derby last year and was very much thrilled. It is a beautiful event to see. But I am interested in races of all kinds, winter or summer.

Warren Lehman, 837 North Latrobe avenue, architect—I am a great lover of horses; so, like thousands of others in this neck of the woods, I'd like to see the Kentucky Derby at Louisville on May 17. It's too bad that we can't have horse races here in Chicago the year around.



Miss Ethel Robinson, 3342 Jackson boulevard, manicurist—I'd like to see the next champion heavyweight prize fight, or boxing match, if you prefer. I've seen two lightweight championship fights, and I liked them. It always brought to my mind the days of old when knights were bold. It would be wonderful to see two heavyweight contestants take that punishment.

F. A. Lindquist, 2725 North Racine avenue, musician—I'd like to attend another Dempsey-Firpo boxing match. That would be one big sporting event worth traveling anywhere to see—in this country, of course. Personally, I should think it would be worth while to stage another match between these two men.

Miss Lenabel Freeman, 708 Buena avenue, student—An auto race is the most exciting event in the world, I imagine. I have never been to one, but I would like to see the one at Indianapolis this year. There is more excitement in the air during these auto races than for any other sport. Won't you send me there as a reporter?

SAMMY MANDELL TO TRY INJURED MITT ON HENRY

Sammy Mandell, the Rockford battler, who will receive his first severest test since he graduated into the lightweight division on May 16, when he takes on Jack Bernstein of New York at Louisville, and Bill Henry of South Chicago have finished strenuous training for their ten round bout at East Chicago tomorrow night.

In his last time out Mandell injured his right hand with Mickey O'Dowd of Muncie, Ind. The fighter and Manager Eddie Long thought it advisable to have at least one fight before the Bernstein affair, which will be held on the night before the Kentucky Derby. When Promoter Oswego offered Long the Henry match he lost no time in closing.

Since that time Henry has shown such improvement in the gymnasium as to convince most of the fans he will make Sammy step for part of the fight at least. Bill is fast and clever. He has a good left hand and indications are the contest will settle down to a battle of left hands. Mandell will not use his right unless he is forced, as no chances will be taken of injuring the weapon with the Bernstein match less than a month away.

The main event will be supported by four other contests. In the six round opener "Farmer Joe" Cooper, the latest addition to the Kane-Long stable, will meet Eddie Rayner of South Chicago. They will scale [illegible] pounds. Kid Buck of Battle Creek, Mich., and Newsboy Brown of Sioux City, Ia., will clash in the second preliminary, which will be eight rounds. They will weigh 116 pounds.

Walsh to Meet Ella.

Eddie Walsh and Jack Ella, local 1[illegible] pounders, will trade punches in another preliminary, while Marine Bannerie of the west side and Jack McDonald of South Chicago, heavyweights, will be the principals in the other. Both will be eight rounds or less. Jimmy Clabby and Eddie McGoorty, well known middleweights of a few years back, will be the referees.

NOTES OF THE GOLFERS.

Rain kept the attendance down at the local courses. There were fair sized turnouts at the Greenview and Budlong Woods courses, which opened yesterday. Jackson Park had both courses open and drew a crowd of several hundred. Harlem, which has been open a week, was well patronized.

The Tavern Golf club closed its indoor tournament in aid of the Olympic fund with a good sum, which will be increased by the personal donation of the Walsh brothers. W. A. Hood of Dixmoor, playing from scratch, registered 31-33-64 in the blind bogey event and took the Olympic prize. Mrs. Fred A. Eskridge, Jr., of Southmoor, led all women players with 61.

The board of governors of the Cook County Municipal Golf association will hold a special meeting tomorrow night at the Traffic club. Dinner will be served at 6:30.

Lawrence, Kas., April 19.—[Special.]—Kansas university tennis men defeated the University of Illinois, two of three matches here today. Capt. George Glaskin of Kansas beat Dubach of Illinois, 7—5, 1—6, 6—3. Rogers, Kansas, beat Capt. Goodwillie, Illinois, Western conference champion, 6—3, 3—6, 6—3. Illinois came back and won the doubles with the same players in action, 7—5, 6—3. Kansas took revenge for yesterday when the Illini pair won two of three matches.

CHESS CHAMP LASKER COMING TO CHICAGO FOR SERIES OF GAMES

CHICAGO chess fans and fanettes, if there are any of the latter who go in for the ancient game, will be given an opportunity of seeing a real master of the checkered board in action next Saturday. Arrangements have been completed by the City club to have Dr. Emanuel Lasker of Germany, winner of the international masters' tourney in New York last week, give a series of exhibitions here at that time.

Dr. Lasker, who held the world's championship for more than thirty years, and who now seems to be the only logical contender for the title which Jose R. Capablanca of Cuba took from him, is to play a number of simultaneous games against the city's leading chess stars. The public is invited to witness the exhibition.

Former Badger Star Made Hamline Athletic Director

St. Paul, Minn., April 19.—Albert Buser of Madison, Wis., former athletic star at the University of Wisconsin, today was appointed athletic director at Hamline university here. He will succeed Ben Beck, resigned. Buser captained the Badger eleven for one season.

CHANCE FOR BOB TO CLINCH CUE TITLE THIS WEEK

This will be a crucial week for Bob Cannefax, of Detroit, leader in the National Three Cushion league. Bob will open his last road trip at Milwaukee tomorrow against Jackson and then in turn will meet Maupome here, Layton at St. Louis and Denton at Kansas City. If he can win a majority of these games he will clinch the first prize of $2,500. Layton is only two games behind him but has to meet Cannefax later at Detroit.

Augie Kieckhefer by winning two games from Moore and two from Copulos, while Copulos also lost twice to Jackson, has climbed into fifth position for which the prize is $900. Augie has ten games yet to play, two each against Heal and Layton at home and six against Ellis, Reiselt and Moore on the road.

ARMY LOSES EQUINE STAR.

New York, April 19.—Submersible, fine thoroughbred, regarded as the most valuable mount in the Army stable that was to have been sent to Paris for the Olympic games, died at Fort Myer, Va., according to word received by the Jockey club.

GOLFERS DO BIT FOR AMERICA'S OLYMPIC FUND

BY JOE DAVIS.

Although golf is not included in the schedule of the Olympic games, Chicago golfers, with true civic and national pride, are responding generously to the call for funds. Everts Wrenn, chairman of the Chicago committee, reports that seven clubs have contributed a total of $1,900. These are South Shore, $500; Midlothian, $250, plus; Bob O'Link, $200; Park Ridge, $200; Lake Shore, $250; Oak Park, $250, and Beverly, $200.

Nearly all forty clubs in the Chicago District Golf association will be represented in tournament play on May 10 or thereabouts in aid of the fund, and the eight clubs in the Chicago Daily Fee Course association have promised similar action.

Fund Match at Edgewater.

On May 11 the Edgewater Golf club will stage a star four ball match in which Jock Hutchison of Glen View and Lawrie Ayton of Evanston will oppose Capt. Ernest Carter of Flossmoor and Chick Evans of Edgewater. An admission fee of $1 will be charged and the whole of the proceeds turned in to the Olympic fund.

Through the courtesy of the Chicago Elevated Advertising company 500 posters will be placed on the elevated stations advertising this match.

All of the clubs operating in the public parks and forest preserves are planning to stage events, so there is every indication the golfers will do their share in sending the American team to Paris.

Women to Limit Field.

In an effort to limit the field to reasonable size, the Women's Western Golf association has placed the maximum of eligibility for the western championship at fourteen strokes. Last year it was eighteen and two years ago twenty-one. At Exmoor last year there were 194 actual starters.

Another innovation announced by Mrs. Farlin H. Ball, the president, is the extension of the final match to thirty-six holes, the same as in the women's national championship.

It has been decided by the executive committee to return to the former system of deciding the women's city team championship. There will be three teams of twelve each, from the north, west and south sides. Eight of the players will be regulars and four alternates. One match will be played in each section.

Woods and Waters by BOB. BECKER

IT TAKES VARIOUS METHODS TO GET THE BIG ONES.

WHEN you stop to figure up the number of methods that a fisherman can use to bring home his trout, bass, pike and other game fishes it's a wonder that any fish can escape the barrage that anglers lay down every season. Consider the methods of bass fishing for the moment. They comprise fly fishing, bait casting with rod and reel, trolling, still fishing and skittering. The baits and lures which can be used are artificial flies of dozens of varieties and patterns, artificial floating and underwater baits, underwater combinations of spinners and flies of all kinds, as well as live minnows, live frogs, hellgramites, crayfish, crickets, grasshoppers, night crawlers or other worms, pork chunks and pork rinds. If that assortment of teasers isn't enough let us add that Frank Wildcat on the Flambeau reservation suggests the hind quarters of a chipmunk as a dandy bait for either bass or pike.

Each method of fishing and nearly every lure will under certain conditions bring home the bacon. Take fly fishing for instance. With wind, weather and water right this form of fishing can't be beaten. Anglers who wish to take up this method are advised to put themselves in the hands of a friend who is no novice at the game, get him to help select the outfit and then arrange to spend a few days with this chap on lake or stream to learn a few of the tricks of the trade. This contact with and help from a fly fisherman is worth more than the reading of a dozen books of instructions on fly fishing as the correct handling of a rod and casting a fly is right before the beginner's eyes, so it is easy to remedy mistakes and get off on the right foot.

Bait casting with rod and reel is probably the most popular method of bass fishing today. A good bamboo rod, a free running multiplying reel and a soft undressed or waterproofed line are necessary, as well as various artificial baits or lures which may vary according to the fisherman's likes or dislikes. There are times when one lure will catch fish all through the best hours of the day. Then one may be after 'em when all kinds of contraptions are necessary to get the persnickety bass to strike.

One evening while fishing that wonderful old Lake of the Woods region near Kenora, Canada, we used just one red ibis fly and spinner for several hours. It was the big medicine that evening, as among other beauties that saw the bottom of our boat was a six pound small mouth bass. Another day when "Big Ben" led us to a little lake near State Line, Wisconsin, a slick little all feather orange and black line (Baltimore Oriole) with a "tail" of long wiggling feathers was the berries and caught two kinds of bass as easy as falling off a log. But many are the days (especially in midsummer) when the darned fish won't take the old standbyes. Then is when you may be forced to change not only the method but also the lures in fishing.

It may be that in the evening conditions will be ideal for fly fishing and the big boys will rise to take a crack at the artificial feather lures. Or the bait caster, turning to night crawlers, minnows or frogs may have to forsake his gay colored lures to get the fish. All of which indicates that the grand old game of fooling the finny tribes makes a fellow use his head as well as his forearm and wrist, and it is well to be prepared for most any type of fishing when going after the game fishes of our streams and lakes.

The Truth

About this Light-Six—plus proof on proof

THIS Studebaker Light-Six is the supreme value in the "thousand-dollar" class.

It offers, not a few, but scores of advantages. In its chassis it represents the best that modern engineering knows. In its steels and quality of construction it is identical with the costliest cars we build.

This is to offer you proofs. Then urge that you see it before paying $1,000 or more for a car.

Some evidence

The extra values which this car typifies have made Studebaker the largest builder of quality cars.

They have made these cars a sensation. Sales have almost trebled in three years. Last year 145,167 people paid $201,000,000 for Studebaker cars.

The multiplying demand has forced an investment of $50,000,000 in model plants and equipment. Of this, $38,000,000 has been spent in the past five years, so the plants are up-to-date.

The engineering department which designs and superintends this Light-Six costs $500,000 per year.

The machines which build it are modern and exact. 517 operations on this car are exact to 1/1000th of an inch. 122 operations are exact to one-half 1/1000th of an inch.

1,200 inspectors are employed to submit each car in the making to 32,000 inspections.

Infinite care

The steels are selected from 35 formulas, each one proved best by years of test for its purpose. On some we pay the makers 15% premium to get them exactly right.

The crankshafts are machined on all surfaces, as was done in the Liberty Airplane Motors. This to give perfect motor balance, at an extra cost to us of $600,000 yearly.

It has more Timken bearings than any other competitive car within $1,500 of its price.

The equipment is unusual. The cushions are of genuine leather, and are ten inches deep.

Every part and detail accords with Studebaker traditions. And the name Studebaker has for 72 years stood for quality and class.

Mark this result

Some men who operate fleets of cars in this class called in auditors to compare the operating costs. They made comparisons on 329 cars, running up to 25,000 miles.

It was found that this Studebaker Light-Six cost for operation 11.4% less than the average of its rivals. This figure included depreciation. That meant $207.50 saved on 25,000 miles. All because of this quality construction.

What it saves you

We build 150,000 cars yearly. All such major costs as engineering, dies, overhead, etc., are divided by 150,000.

We build in model plants, with modern machinery, which have immensely reduced the manufacturing costs.

A car like this, built under ordinary conditions, would cost you from $200 to $400 more.

Learn, for your own sake, what that means to you.

MOTORDOM

Association of Commerce Asks National Survey of Illinois Roads

BY J. L. JENKINS.

What actual returns do the owners of more than 1,000,000 automobiles in Illinois get from the money they have spent for highway paving and improvement?

How can the traffic congestion and dangers in Cook county be relieved and motor transportation of both county and state be given the advantages and facilities most needed now?

What roads in county and state are the "natural channels of traffic movement" and which of the main routes of the completed primary system demand immediate attention and improvement?

THESE and all other vital highway transportation questions will be answered by the United States bureau of public roads—the highest highway court in the world—if the good roads committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce has its way.

The committee passed resolutions last week indorsing the plan of the Cook county board to investigate all angles of the county's road situation, in order to develop a "greater highway program" for all future time. They called on both state and county authorities, asking for a thorough survery and traffic census to be taken this spring and summer, and suggested that the county and state ask for the coöperation of the United States bureau in this work. If the plan is acted upon favorably by county and state authorities the good roads boosters believe that it will bring about national as well as local improvements in the planning and building of road systems.

The United States bureau is convinced, according to Thomas MacDonald, its chief, that the solution of problems encountered in the highway transportation of freight and passengers depends upon a sufficient volume of data gathered in typical sections of the country on the use of roads. The problems, he declared recently, are so involved and the interests affected are so varied that impartial and scientific information must be obtained before the expenditure of huge amounts of public money is warranted on projects other than the building of primary interstate and state roads. The bureau has established an excellent investigation system, and is known to be willing to coöperate with any local authorities wise enough to see the valu of such survys.

Members of the Association of Commerce committee pointed out that the highway investigation in which the government body coöperated with Connecticut authorities in 1922-'23 was one of the most important steps in modern roads history. Its results were made a feature at the last national convention of the American Road Builders' association in Chicago and have been used as a working basis by engineers everywhere.

Among other things, the Connecticut survey served to allocate construction and maintenance funds according to the distribution of traffic over the highway system. It predicted future traffic volume and the improvements necessary to care for the increases. It determined the daily and seasonal traffic density on all primary and secondary highways and determined the exact tonnage carried in both freight and passengers by the various arteries. It showed, too, the relationship of highway transportation with other methods, particularly as to freight rates, mileage and times of delivery.

It is believed that the Cook county board will welcome the committee's suggestion of government coöperation. Several weeks ago, at the request of Commissioner Frank Wilson, chairman of the county roads and bridges committee, it ordered a survey made of the county system. President Cermak approved the plan and asked for an early report from the committee.

A communication from Maj. George A. Quinlan, county superintendent of highways, told the association committee that the county board has practically completed a new map which will show all highways in the county, their new markings, free camp sites in the forest preserves, the names adopted for the preserves, and all other data of interest to the motorist. These maps will be distributed as widely as possible both in the county and state and will serve as the best guide so far developed for Chicago and Cook county visitors.

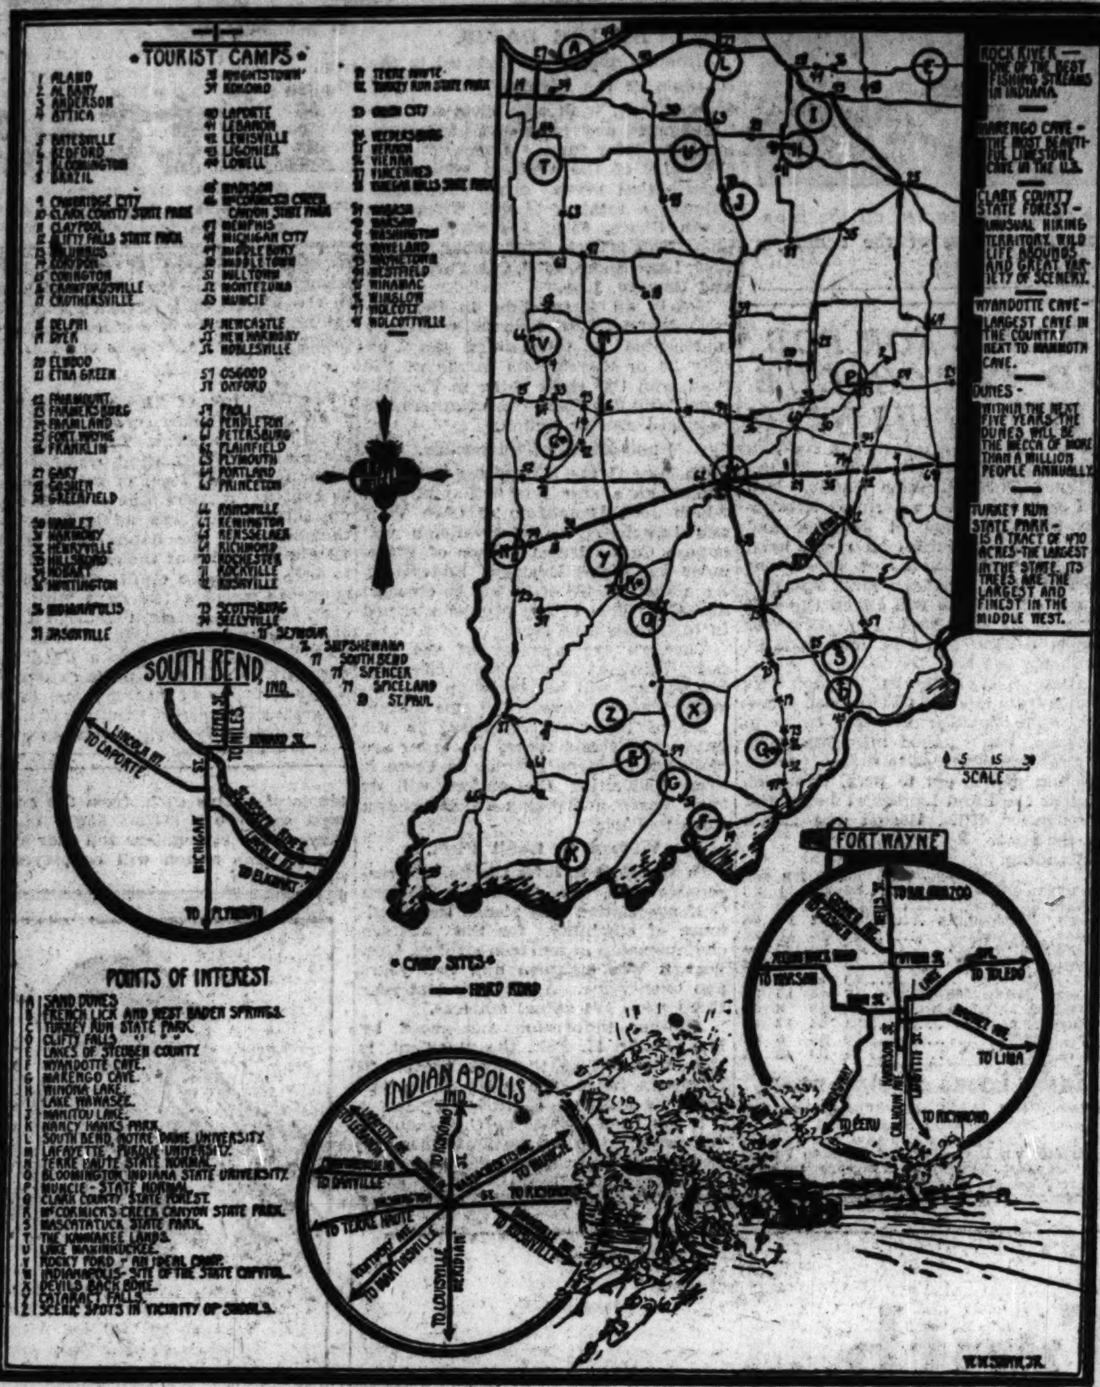
More than 40 per cent of the county's roads have been numbered and marked to date, according to the report, and this work will be pushed for the benefit of early spring and summer tourists.

The committee passed resolutions commending the map work and requesting the state highway department to rush its proposed marking of through routes in Chicago.

LOSS OF POWER.

A clutch which slips is the cause of constant waste of power and fuel, besides imposing an unnecessary strain on the motor

INDIANA WELCOMES TRAIL FANS



Hoosierdom hesitated for some little time before jumping into the race for automobile tourists' patronage, but the state has made up for lost time by equipping nearly 100 free camp sites, improving its stone and gravel roads, and building new pavements as fast as the treasury will permit.

Here is a picture of the welcome you will find this season in Indiana. Paved roads are shown by the heavy, black lines. Camp sites are listed by numbers and points of interest by letters on the map.

California Aflame with Flowers as Touring Opens

RECENT rains not only have brought cheer to coast ranchers, but have insured floral glories for the motoring public, according to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California. This is the season of the year when southern California orchards and hillsides burst forth into full bloom and afford spectacles of remarkable beauty for the city dweller whose country life is confined to a weekly motor pilgrimage into the hills and valleys or to the seashore.

Almond, apricot and peach orchards are already in bloom in the San Fernando, Beaumont, Banning and Yucaipa valleys. Cherry blossom time is on its way in the Beaumont district, and the poppy, California's flaming state flower, can be found on many hillsides, particularly in the Morena valley and in the Saugus district.

Within a few weeks the unique spectacle of the deserts in bloom may be seen in the regions of Hesperia, Victorville, Barstow, Palmdale and Mojave. While these sections are a trifle remote from the population centers, for a one day's drive, it is said that the spectacle presented is well worth the effort of the trip. It is only occasionally that the desert stretches are seen with their crowning glory of native wild flowers and indications are that this spring will offer one of the most elaborate displays.

Fighting Rust.

One of the best ways to free shackle and spring bolts that have become sufficiently rusted to prevent lubrication entering under high pressure is to soak some waste in kerosene and bind this around the parts affected. Be sure that the oil soaked waste is nowhere near an exhaust pipe or electrical connection that might start a fire.

AUTO INQUISITION IS ACID TEST FOR FULL FLEDGED FANS

THE auto questionnaire is the latest type to appear upon the horizon, pushing Edison's famous list back into obscurity. Below is a list of questions submitted by a reader. Can you answer all the questions within five minutes, without asking a book of reference? The answer to each question is merely the name of a well known make of automobile nothing more.

Take out your watch and then cast your eye over the following:

1. Name an automobile with the same name as a President of the United States. Name another one.
2. What car would you name if some one threw something at you?
3. What would you do if angry?
4. How would you cross a stream without a bridge?
5. A famous battle of the revolution.
6. What car denotes royalty?
7. Which one is used for fuel?
8. Which one for food?
9. Which is represented by two letters of the alphabet?
10. The name of a watch.
11. Which car does a convict think of most?
12. A caretaker.
13. A discoverer of the lightning rod.
14. A irver in the Holy Land.
15. Portion of a book.
16. A bright and shining light. Another one.
17. A California city.
18. Loveliest city of the plain.
19. The hardest car on the market.
20. A car always the same color.
21. A river of New York state.

BETTER THAN CLOTHES.

Statistics show that the clothing dollar is worth only $0.516 today, compared with the 1913 dollar taken as a standard. But the automobile dollar today buys $1.11 as compared with ten years ago.

Effective Gauge.

An oil gauge which is attached to one of the pet cock openings in the openings in the crankcase will indicate the amount of oil carried, but at night, when the gauge cannot be easily seen, the car owner is inclined to take a chance. Again, on a long trip, the oil may be consumed more rapidly than expected, with the result that the oil drops below the safe level.

A gauge that gives a warning when the oil line drops may be made from a U-shaped piece of flat metal fastened to the gauge so that the flat pin passes through it. The colored ball usually found in such gauges is replaced by a metal disc. The U-piece carries two screws which serve to hold the light wire. These screws are so located that the metal disc, on lowering, forms an electrical contact between them. A small red light on the dash issues the warning signal.

CARS OF A DIFFERENT SCHOOL

The whole attitude in building Case is different. For decades Case has been schooled in the manufacture of machinery destined to terrible abuse as a matter of course.

Case ideas of durability spring from the manufacture of automotive machinery which, unlike the motor car, never operates at less than full capacity—rarely receives skilled attention—and hardly dare fail.

The sheer necessity of doing everything supremely well is bred right into the community of technicians who build Case cars.

The result is an American car expressing devotion to the ideal of doing things "too well." But the world's finest cars—or anything fine—must be made just that way.

ESSEX SIX COACH

$975

Freight and Tax Extra

And the Coach is Exclusive to Hudson and Essex

The Coach is a Hudson-Essex invention. No other type and no other car gives closed car comforts at open car cost.

The Coach costs but little more than the open models of either Hudson or Essex. The extra cost of closed models on other cars is from $300 up, even on the lowest priced cars. More than 125,000 Coaches are in service. Sales exceed 3,000 every week. Everyone prefers a closed car. The Coach alone is the quality car within the reach of all. No wonder the Coach on Hudson and Essex is the world's largest selling six-cylinder closed car.

It is the Car for Everyone

In two and one-half years the Coach has proved a staunchness and reliability never before associated with a closed car. In all service in every part of the world it satisfies the pride of ownership. It gives all the utility you get in any closed car. No one who knows will be content with anything less than closed car comforts, and the Coach alone gives those comforts at open car cost.

Hudson and Essex Are of one Quality

Both are the creations of the same engineers. They are built in the same shops by the same workmen under the same patents. There is no difference in quality of material or workmanship.

The price you want to pay for a car will decide whether it shall be a Hudson or Essex. The closed car advantages of the Coach and its price leave no other consideration.

The Evidence Detroit Gives

Sales leadership in Detroit is a far more important endorsement than its similar position elsewhere. For motor car values are better understood than anywhere else in the world.

More than 200,000 Detroit automobile workers know the inside of every automobile success. They appraise values as experts. They buy the cars they believe in.

For three successive months Hudson-Essex sales in Detroit and throughout Michigan have outnumbered any other makes with the exception of two widely known low-priced four-cylinder cars.

This unanswerable evidence is proof of what the most critical and best informed group of motor buyers in the world think of Hudson and Essex.

The cars they buy are the cars it is safe for you to buy.

Hudson and Essex Are of One Quality

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO BUYERS:

This remarkable value offered in Hudson and Essex is matched by the astonishingly low parts prices and the progressive service policy that keeps maintenance down to a minimum. Be sure and get parts price list from your dealer.

French Athlete Plans Invasion of Hoosier Track

Mourre to Be Feature of 1924 Battle on the Speedway.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 19.—Antoine Mourre, famous sportsman of Paris, France, has been entered as a pilot in the international 500 mile race which will be held at the Indianapolis Motor speedway Friday, May 30.

This will be Mourre's first competition on the Hoosier course, although he has an international reputation as a driver on the road course of the old world.

He is expected to arrive in Indianapolis with his car about the 1st of May, to start the long training period to accustom himself to the rigors and tricks of the track and the long race.

Mourre is one of the greatest athletes of France. Before the war he was a cavalry officer and one of the most expert horsemen in his country. He excelled as an aviator in the world war, joining the aviation corps in its infancy.

He played on the all-French Rugby team against the all-American fifteen in Paris when the Pershing stadium was dedicated. Among other records he holds the French pole vault record and is an artist with the foils.

Not content with his victorious competition in other lines of sport, he began driving racing automobiles, and has been most successful on the road courses, especially at the wheel of smaller cars.

In France Mourre is the manufacturer of the Mourre automobile. From 1920 to 1922 he won every light car race staged under the Tricolor.

Mourre will be more at home on the Indianapolis course than any other track in the land because it approximates the road conditions in the French races.

Each year France sends over a new batch of drivers to compete for the high racing honors at Indianapolis, first won by a foreigner in 1913, when Jules Goux came home first in a Peugeot.

The invasion was successful until 1920, when America again regained supremacy and has held it in the succeeding years. This has been a blow to French manufacturers, drivers, and sportsmen, but so far they have not been able to stem the tide of American victories.

THE INQUIRING REPORTER

He's Out to Learn the Truth About Motordom.

The Tribune will pay $5 for each question accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter," The Tribune, Chicago. For today's question Anthony Giano, 6749 South Paulina street, Chicago, was awarded $5.

The Question.

What country road near Chicago offers the best Sunday drive?

Where Asked.

Lobby of the federal building.

The Answers.

Andy Miller, 4708 Washington boulevard, photographer—All the paved roads are good for me except on Sunday, when all of the Sunday drivers are out. Then they are terrible. I like the River road best because of its scenery. In the spring, it makes one of the most beautiful drives that can be found in this part of the country. There are many places along the road that make perfect picnic spots.

W. P. Hassett, 5802 South Park avenue, deputy U. S. marshal — The Higgins road leading to Elgin is a wonderful highway and one of the most pleasant for a Sunday drive. It is not usually as crowded as some of the other paved roads more recently completed. With the improvement work done on it last fall it should be a popular route this summer.

A. Abrahams, 719 Bowen avenue, deputy U. S. marshal—The drive down Marquette road to Western avenue and the Dixie highway to Danville is a splendid drive. It is 134 miles to Danville, and the driver has to step along to make the trip down and back in one day, but the drive is worth the trouble.

Andrew Jostock, 1443 Larrabee street, deputy U. S. marshal — There are two roads I have in mind. The Rand road north, now concreted past Lake Zurich, offers a splendid run. Then there is the Lake George road, just across the Indiana line, which runs through the middle of the lake near Hammond. It offers an unusual experience to the Chicago driver.

John J. Orros, 5009 West End avenue, deputy U. S. marshal—I like the Joliet road for the old memories it brings. You see, it leads down to so many breweries where the doors are now padlocked. The road is congested, like all other highways about Chicago, but it gets you into the country and is usually a pleasant kind of highway.

Parking Tips.

Whenever possible avoid parking your car on a down grade. If it is absolutely necessary, turn the front wheels of your car towards the curb or roadside, thereby letting the wheels serve as a wedge. Some drivers make it a practice to put the car in reverse gear when facing down a hill.

It is indeed poor practice to park your car near a street corner, crosswalk, hydrant, taxi stand, safety zone, busy entrance, alley driveway, fire house, or on a curve.

Over the Desert..

The number of registered motor cars in Mosul during 1923 was 200 or less, but recently several new cars have appeared, Consul John Randolph reports from Bagdad. These cars, which were bought in Syria, were filled with passengers, who are said to have paid from $80 to $100 each for the ride across the desert to Mosul. This passenger service, possible for practically every car purchased in Syria, probably explains the slight improvement in the Mosul market. Such cars pay duty both in Syria and in the Iraq custom house, but the passenger fares more than compensate for this double charge. Cars reaching Mosul through Basrah and Bagdad pay no customs duty to Syria.

Yes! Takes any hill in high that any car will make

Time and again the Gardner has proved that it will climb any hill that any car of any size or price will make—and do it in high gear! Gardner owners have repeatedly driven their cars up steep grades where other cars falter and shift to second half-way up—and accelerated while doing it.

Such hill-ability is due to the famous five-bearing crankshaft Gardner motor and perfect balance of weight and strength between the engine and rear end. Because of this, the Gardner delivers its full quota of power from the engine through the properly designed driving shaft to the rear wheels, where you need and use it.

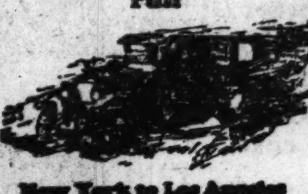
This means an abundance of power available when you need it to pull through a long stretch of deep sand or out of a mud hole. It indicates quick responsiveness when you want to dash around a "road hog" on the highway. It assures comfortable riding and comfortable driving at all speeds.

It means pull and speed equal to any emergency.

It shows also the advantages of weighing pistons and connecting rods individually. Gardner engineers do this to make certain that four pistons and four connecting rods of equal weight go into each Gardner motor. It shows the advantage of balancing the crankshaft and flywheel two ways. That is expensive. Few manufacturers think it necessary. But it assures abundant power, not only on level stretches, but when the car is pulling a heavy load up a steep grade.

Compare the Gardner with any car at anywhere near its price. And you'll marvel. Note how it eats up hills—walks through traffic—glides over the open road. Stretch out your legs—there's leg room for the tallest. No crowding either — those, wide, deep seats provide plenty of space for five full-grown people. We invite you to drive a Gardner on demonstration.

"Cannon Ball" Baker conquers steep grades in Gardner Sedan on record midwinter run



New York to Los Angeles in 4 days, 14 hours, 15 minutes

You cannot find steeper grades than "Cannon Ball" Baker encountered—and conquered—in the stock Gardner Sedan he drove 3,366 miles from New York to Los Angeles in midwinter.

"Pulled over Raton Pass in beautiful shape," wired "Cannon Ball" Baker from Raton, N. M. "Even with 4,000-lb. load, and with a blizzard raging in pass, Gardner motor never faltered." And from Needles, Cal., he wired again: "Went through famous Blue Canyon Pass at night in high. Reserve power of Gardner motor astonishing."

Big Motor Plants Steady to Meet Spring Demands

New Car Deliveries Speed Up with Drop in Retail Sales.

BY WHITCOMB WILLIAMS.

DETROIT, Mich., April 19.—[Special.]—Notwithstanding the fact that sales of automobiles have not been quite up to expectations of dealers during the last three or four weeks, it has caused no perceptible alarm in their ranks. The same, too, can be said of manufacturers who are producing as never before. The last half of March and the first half of April seemed to have been a period of "consideration" on the part of prospective buyers. A great army of them decided just what make and model will satisfy them, and dealers are satisfied that the time is just about ripe for an abundant harvest of orders.

Reports from the many large plants are to the effect that buyers can now be supplied with cars on short orders, as practically all the dealers have sufficient stock on hand to supply the normal, or looked for demand upon them.

Good business has prevailed throughout the first quarter of 1924; better, in fact, than anticipated at the beginning of the year. It met the optimistic predictions of both manufacturers and dealers. The increase of 33 per cent over the same period last year, in the opinion of dealers, is remarkable, in view of the fact that 1923 was the industrial banner year. There is not a dealer in the whole Detroit district but what sees in the spring, summer and fall demands for cars, an indication of another record breaking year.

Orders for future deliveries are also larger than ever before, and are the cause of no small amount of optimistic comment on the part of the dealers. These conditions are not only local, but from reports received from other sections of the country are existing elsewhere.

The curtailed production in a few of the plants during March was not great enough to offset the advance made by other producers. The month, consequently, returned a high total of 356,505 cars and trucks, only slightly less than that of February and considerably more than that of March last year.

April's figure will be determined, to a great extent, by weather conditions, which proved a great factor in holding back sales in March, and a conservative policy is being followed by manufacturers until definite assurance is given that the business that did not develop in March was simply deferred. Some makers who did not operate at capacity throughout the winter months and whose stock in the hands of dealers is low are in position to maintain strong programs. While keeping operations temporarily from mounting to new high levels, the industry will stand in readiness to increase schedules as soon as reports from the retail trade warrant.

No one seems to be able to figure out just why such a large number of orders have been placed in advance of delivery dates, but the general opinion is that the shortage of new cars during the spring months of 1923 made an impression upon the buying public and that buyers have placed their orders in advance to forestall any possibility of not being able to have new cars when they want them.

Facts as to sales of Ford and General Motors corporation, the leaders in the industry, are considered good barometers. Reports from Dodge Brothers, Rickenbacker, Paige, and Hudson give a fair idea of the trend in sales and production in general. Sales of Willys-Overland, Nash, Maxwell-Chrysler, Pierce-Arrow, Jordan, Reo, Durant, White and Mack trucks, and a few others, have been either equal or better than the first quarter of 1923.

In March the Ford company sold 205,735, an increase of 81,000 over last January. It was a new high mark for any single month. The January and February combined output of Ford vehicles totaled 364,417, while the sales for these two months were 229,000, or considerably below production. This, however, was in line with the plan of the company, which did not anticipate selling near the total number of cars produced; but to prepare for the big demand which usually comes with spring.

Aggregate sales of General Motors Corporation during the first quarter of 1924, including its American and Canadian divisions, totaled 210,914 cars and trucks. This is 34,656 more than were sold during the first three months of 1923, and is equivalent to almost 20 per cent, and three times greater than the number sold during the first quarter of 1922. March sales are estimated at 72,000, which is the highest month in the corporation's history.

Other first quarter sales were: Olds, Lansing, 21,214 sixes; Dodge, 65,000, with a daily present production of 1,000; Nash, of Milwaukee and Kenosha, 11,997, an increase of nearly 800 over the corresponding period of 1923; Paige, 16,719 Paige and Jewett cars.

Fourteen thousand Studebakers were turned out during the month of March, and all plants are now at nearly capacity production. The Hudson company made 14,672 Hudson and Essex cars in March, which was an increase over March, 1923, of 72 per cent.

WRECKING THE GERMS

California automobiles are not threatened with the deadly foot and mouth disease which is sweeping through valuable herds of cattle in the state; but neither do they intend to aid the spread of the fatal germs. The picture shows one of many disinfecting troughs, placed at county lines where quarantine is in force. All cars are thus disinfected before reaching a new county.

PROPER ADJUSTMENT.

Your rear view mirror should be adjustable for two positions so as to give an immediate view of the street directly behind the car or at a distance. Either that or there should be two mirrors, each permanently adjustable for the view it is to reflect.

Buffalo Tackles Traffic Problems Through City Body

BUFFALO has solved many of her traffic problems by scientific study.

On request of the Buffalo safety bureau, Mayor Frank X Schwab appointed a citizens' committee to analyze the problem and to map out a plan of adequate traffic control to bring relief from the hazards of street congestion and confusion. All interested organizations, civic, municipal, and business, were represented on the mayor's traffic board. With the backing of the various interests best affiliated this group went to work. No business project ever received more conscientious study than was accorded the city traffic needs by those volunteers.

Among the recommendations made by the committee and approved by the mayor were: The standardization of color signals at all street crossings and specifications covering construction and erection of all streets safety, parking, and caution signs.

The widening of certain streets to expedite traffic by lengthening and narrowing the chained off safety platform used by street car patrons.

The purchase of 100 additional safety beacons.

The erection of 150 new school warning signs, with similar signs stenciled in three foot letters on the pavement 300 feet from the school grounds.

A substantial increase in the police traffic force, which, although supervising traffic on 963 miles of streets, has remained unchanged in size for more than five years.

A triplicate card system insures the apprehension of all traffic ordinance violators. Under the new system the offenders, the court, and the precinct station house will receive the same notice, and a check-up on each case by both the court and police will then be made possible.

While the work of the traffic board has been important, other agencies have been active. Another organization which has proved its worth in curbing the reckless driver who believes himself out of reach of the uniformed law is the citizens' safe traffic committee, developed by the traffic bureau. As in other cities, the 400 business men who compose this fraternity of ex-officio law enforcers report violators to the chief of police.

Europe Shifts Often.

Because of their small engines, the majority of European cars are equipped with four speeds forward instead of three, with the result that the driver must shift from fourth to third speed in order to climb the most ordinary hill.

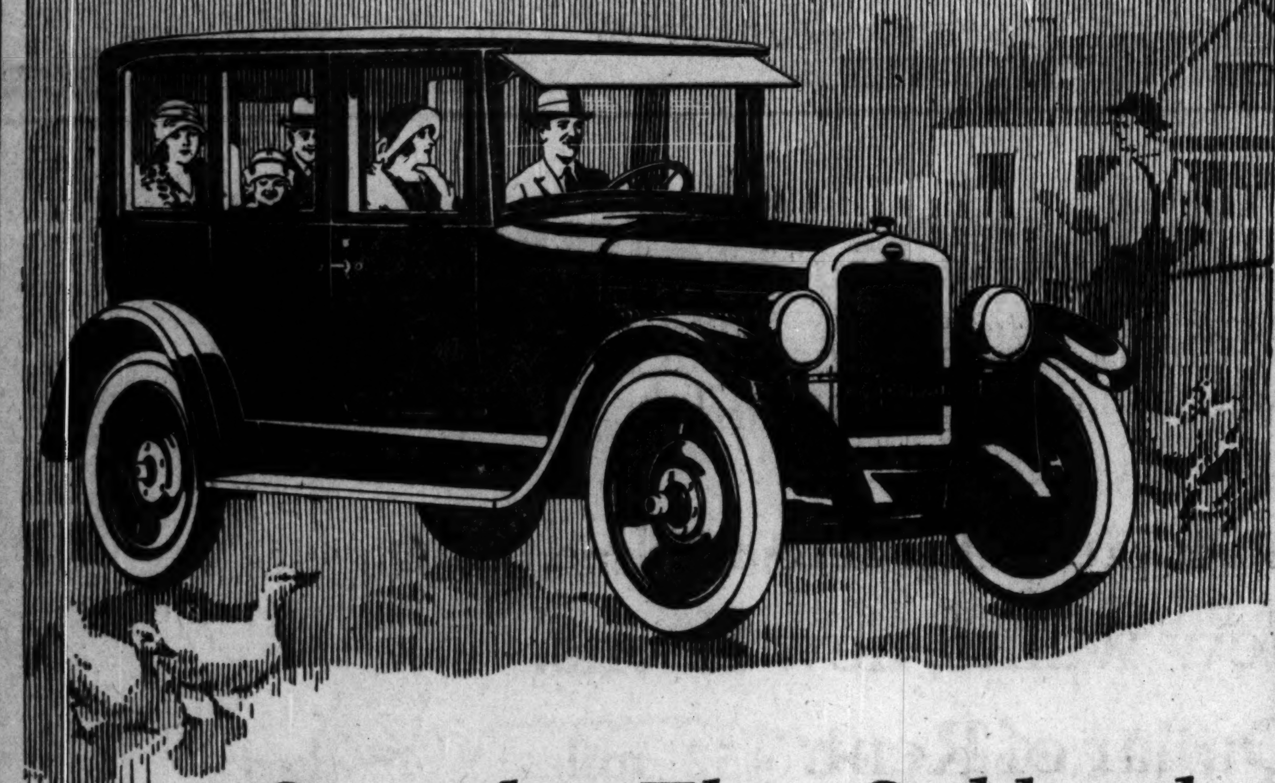
Dependable for Every Engine

Ambitious Chicago Women never let a morning pass without a careful reading of THE TRIBUNE. They know they can't afford it.



Consider This Oakland Sedan at $1445

THERE is genuine satisfaction in owning this Oakland Six Sedan. It actually incorporates more advanced construction and worth-while features than you will find in any other Sedan selling at a similar price. Here are just a few of the facts you can verify for yourself.

Oakland's new six-cylinder engine is compact and powerful. Its full pressure lubrication to all bearings, automatic spark control, patented bronze-backed bearings and all-round advanced design give it the smoothness so desirable in a closed car.

Oakland's four-wheel brakes are sound and practical. In the Sedan, a family car, don't overlook this very real safety feature. If you doubt their desirability just drive an Oakland.

The body is distinctive. It is Fisher-built—beautiful and complete. Comparisons with other sedans will increase your desire for it.

Oakland's new Duco finish will be a revelation to you. More beautiful than ordinary finishes, it is also many times more durable. In no other car, similarly priced, can you obtain this finish.

The control system is exclusively Oakland. Horn, throttle, ignition switch, choke and light controls—all are on the steering wheel, right under your hand. There is nothing on the dash, except the neat, indirectly lighted instrument board.

Disc steel wheels are standard on the Sedan. They are safer, better looking, more desirable in every way.

These are the facts, and the Sedan price is only $1445 at the factory. To insure complete satisfaction you cannot afford to pay less, and you need not pay more. Consider the Oakland—see it, ride in it, drive it—then decide for yourself.

A New Quality of Power Almost Unbelievable

The new Peerless Six has just made its debut.

Yet, already, motorists realize that this big, handsome car has a new quality of power that is almost unbelievable.

See it in traffic moving at snail's pace one instant then getting away like greased lightning the next—and without shifting a gear.

See it on the open road—taking the hills easily and smoothly, or hurtling across the horizon with an impetuous dash.

You never "work" with the Peerless Six. You have a knowledge of power aplenty to meet any emergency—an instinctive feeling of security and ease of control that lets the most timid riders rest and relax.

Comfort and Safety combined

Comfort is a thing understood the minute you sink into the deep cushioned seats. Peerless-Lockheed, Hydraulic four-wheel brakes give added security—and a safe, sure stop. Everyone knows the superior advantages of hydraulic brakes.

But see this new Peerless. Whether you contemplate buying a new car this Spring or not, spend a few minutes looking over this superb Six. Then ride in it and you will appreciate that here is a value heretofore unknown in a high quality Six—and, at a moderate price.

One of these amazing cars traveled from coast to coast in high gear—with low, second and reverse gears removed!

It pulled through Missouri mud, hub-deep, where other cars were stuck.

It crossed the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains in high gear—though everyone said it couldn't be done!

It established the remarkable economy record of 27.8 miles per gallon of gasoline, for the entire 3,674 miles.

Arriving at Los Angeles—it proceeded at once to the Los Angeles Speedway and ran 68 miles an hour, under official observation.

Immediately thereafter, it negotiated the 452 miles from Los Angeles to San Francisco in 10 hours and 45 minutes!

And at no time during this tremendously trying transcontinental run, was the car's emergency kit opened!

Frankly, we know of no severer tests that have ever been applied to a motor car, regardless of size or price!

Yet—if you can think of a severer test, if there is anything else within reason we can do to demonstrate any feature or quality of this car—tell us what it is —AND WE'LL DO IT!

If you're in doubt about one single point—put your problem squarely up to us and we will demonstrate that this Oldsmobile Six, at $795, offers all that the most exacting could ask of an automobile—and considerably more!

Northwest Roads Ground Away by Growing Traffic

BECAUSE the gravel is grinding away under heavier traffic faster than it is being replaced with new, many sections of the Minnesota trunk highway system are not in as good condition as two years ago, division engineers agreed at a recent monthly meeting at the St. Paul offices of the state highway department.

Trunk route patrolmen will be urged to haul more gravel this season toward restoring the graveled sections, even at the expense of other work. This remedy for the threatening condition was decided the only alternative although the engineers said that continued extravagance in the use of gravel on the heavier traveled roads will result in a gravel famine in the state before many years.

Evidence that there is too little rather than too much road dragging during dry weather was submitted when several public criticisms to the contrary were taken up. The engineers without exception were of the opinion that dragging is essential in dry weather to prevent the heavier traveled routes from becoming choppy or like washboards. This was backed up by a questionary circulated among the patrolmen who by a vote of more than 40 to 1, agreed that there was no unnecessary dragging, although they admitted they would prefer to haul gravel or do almost any other kind of work because it is easier both on them and their teams.

MORE PARK ROADS.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—An appropriation of $7,500,000 for the construction and improvement of roads and trails in the national parks has been authorized by the senate. The bill passed the house some time ago. The new highways will give access to many points of interest hitherto closed to motor tourists and are expected to add materially to the popularity of the great national reserves as summer playgrounds.

Prepare to Handle 100,000 Visitors to Yellowstone

A FLEET of 200 sight seeing automobiles and an attractive Swiss chalet inn will be features of the Cody road gateway to Yellowstone park this year.

Anticipating that approximately 100,000 tourists will visit the national playground through this entrance during the coming season, the management of the Burlington railroad which terminates at Cody, Wyo., is increasing its facilities and elaborating on arrangements for handling the crowds this summer. The Cody entrance to Yellowstone starts where the railroad ends and affords a magnificent scenic ride of 100 miles by auto.

Automobiles depart from either end of the road every morning and arrive at the half-way Cody Inn, at noon for rest and luncheon.

This gateway is used not only by tourists entering the park but for those who have gone in by other gateways and come out by way of automobile routes. Last year about 75,000 visitors entered the park by way of Cody.

Of the total number of tourists in Yellowstone last season Illinois furnished the largest quota, 9,574 natives of that state entering the various gates.

Highway Trees.

Four thousand green ash trees, four to five feet high, remain of the 1924 supply for planting in state parks and along state highways in Minnesota, according to an announcement from the office of G. M. Conzett, state forester, St. Paul. The plantings are undertaken locally, as a rule, and by civic organizations.

The forestry department was unsuccessful this year in an attempt to secure a large number of elm trees but the ash are said to be desirable and suitable for roadside plantings. Because of the loss of quite a percentage of the small black walnut trees distributed last year, plantings of that variety on the roads has been abandoned, at least until such time as larger specimens can be procured.

GOSSIP OF THE AUTO TRADE

JOHN A. ROSE, manager of the export sales department of Nash Motors, has resigned to undertake other work in the automobile field, according to announcement made yesterday by C. W. Nash. The announcement was accompanied by a statement highly commending the veteran official's work with the company.

The Bak-O-Line company has opened an unusual service station at 26 South Peoria street for the benefit of Chicago patrons. Instead of painting automobiles the company removes the paint and finish and bakes new enamel on the car in an oven which registers 160 degrees of heat.

"Name a new test for the Oldsmobile," is the challenge sent out to the public last week by the Olds Motor works. Officials point out that the new model has been driven from New York to California with all gears but high removed, has hung up new stock speed records and performed all of the other stunts the factory can think of.

Although total motor car production in March dropped 2½ per cent as compared to February figures, the production of Davis cars increased more than 75 per cent during the month, according to factory announcement received yesterday by the Davis company.

Walter P. Chrysler has brought another prominent automobile executive into the Maxwell-Chrysler family in the person of John D. Mansfield, formerly associated with Dort. The new executive will make the Detroit factory his headquarters.

Getting Acquainted.

In shifting from a car of one type of gear shift to another the motorist is sometimes puzzled for a few days until he gets into the habit of doing it the new way automatically. To prevent any hesitation in traffic while "puzzling it out," why not mark the four speed positions on the corners of a six by six piece of cardboard, cut a hole in the center, slip it over the gear shift, and tack the corners to the floor?

WHAT the MOON dealers—including ourselves—have to tell you is very different from the same old automobile story you've been hearing.

Years ago, MOON saw that the way to give the car buyer every last dollar's worth there is in the automotive industry—is to make use of all the resources of the industry.

So MOON called in the foremost specialists in the production of standard mechanical units—collaborated with them in designing co-ordinated units for the MOON Car. Had these units built specially for the MOON. And then developed its own specialty—putting plenty of good old-fashioned work into building the finished car.

You'll not find anywhere a better engine than the special MOON-Continental Red Seal Motor—and very few so good.

AMONG some ambitious salesmen it is the fashion to try to put a car out of competition by calling it an "assembled car."

This phrase doesn't work quite so well as it used to. Nearly every car today is using specialist mechanical units of one make or another. And nearly every car buyer knows it.

COLE

And Now—the Crowning Service to Motordom

It has become generally recognized that the Cole Motor Car Company is now building the finest car in its history.

—fine from a standpoint of engineering —fine from a standpoint of equipment and finish
—fine from a standpoint of comfort and luxury.

Not a little of the car's fineness is due to its perfect balance and its consequent remarkable riding quality—a balance and a riding quality that few cars at any price can approach and which no car, however expensive, can excel.

It is a notable fact that, when universal acceptance of the balloon tire became inevitable, the Cole cars alone were ready, engineeringly, for its instant adoption.

Balloon tires, therefore, appeared first on Cole cars, and are now optional at slight extra cost on any one of the current Cole master models.

We are ready to give you this great, new riding experience by appointment.

Goodrich also offers Balloon Cords in a full range of sizes for 20 and 21 inch wheels.

Goodrich Balloon Cords

Whatever problem your car presents, Goodrich can equip it with Balloon Cords. . . . We can add to your car, new or old, the super service, the smooth riding motoring of low-air pressure tires.

This is why: Goodrich manufactures Balloon Cords for 20 and 21 inch wheels (the new equipment), and also for existing wheels and rims. Thus, Goodrich Balloon Cord sizes cover the entire range of wheels.

The advantage of Balloon Cords is one of a degree of enjoyment, safety and efficiency. Just as riding in a parlor car is more enjoyable than riding in a day coach, riding on Balloon Cords is more comfortable than riding on high-air pressure tires.

All sizes of Goodrich Balloon Cords possess this added smooth-running comfort, and anti-skid safety.

What is more, the name, Goodrich, on a tire assures quality; and quality is the one uncertain factor in Balloon Cords. It adds to your confidence to know that your Balloon Cords are the product of the same manufacturer that fathered cord tires.

To ride on Balloon Cords is the up-to-date way to motor. The ordinary bump and jolt of rough road and pavement are absorbed in the yielding cushions of air on the wheels.

The source of expert and reliable advice on Balloon Cords is the Goodrich Dealer. Call on him. He will inform you of the proper size for your car. Ask him to go over with you our Balloon Cord Information Chart, and secure from him our latest Bulletin "Goodrich Balloon Cords".

FARM AND GARDEN

Hogs Used as Text Books in Farmers' Open Air Schools

Producers Find It Worth While to Know Best Market Grades.

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

SOME big arguments are going to be heard among live stock men during the next few years over the best kind of animal to produce for the market. There is already disagreement here and there in live stock circles as to the standards now set up before farmers who have the job of breeding and feeding animals that are made into meat.

E. C. BIRD.
[Lee Bros. Photo.]

Edward N. Wentworth of Armour's live stock bureau says: "The steers that win grand championships at our leading shows would be penalized if their carcasses were put into every day trade; in fact, most of them could not be sold at all, regardless of the quality of their meat after proper trimming had taken place. Our judging ideals today do not approach the most profitable type of steer from an all-around standpoint so closely as they should."

Worth Their While.

Practical live stock producers have begun to realize there is much room for improvement in the production of live stock, to meet consumers' demands.

In a recent radio address broadcast by THE TRIBUNE's sending station, J. D. Harper, executive secretary of the National Live Stock Producers' association, said that since farmers have been closely following the course of their products to the consumer, they have learned more about what everybody likes.

"Out of this growing interest in marketing I find that farmers in several live stock states are finding it worth while to know more about market grades of animals and how best to prepare cattle, hogs, and sheep for the market and get them to the buyer," said Mr. Harper.

Open Air School.

"For instance, John Schwab, a live stock specialist with Purdue university, has been coöperating with farmers this spring in holding meetings at local stock yards.

Typical of these meetings was one recently held at South Bend, attended by 128 farmers who hung on the fence in a snow storm to learn more about grades and market classifications. There were expert judges, veteran shippers, transportation specialists, as well as scientific and practical breeders and feeders on hand to answer farmers' questions.

This is the way they conducted the open air school at the stock yards:

W. H. Favinger, who has bought live stock in northern Indiana for about fourteen years, climbed into a pen with a bunch of hogs. "Whose pig is this?" said Mr. Favinger, slapping a six months' old porker weighing 225 pounds on the back.

The owner on top of the fence proudly yelled back: "That's mine."

"Well, now, men, here's the kind of hog the packers want. See how he stands up on his feet! Notice that strong back and firm bone and how well he's finished! That pig will dress out a high percentage of good meat in the packing plant. Packers like this type.

"Now let me show you the kind they don't want. Whose pig is this" said Mr. Favinger, punching with his cane a scrawny, hairy, razor backed pig. "How old is this one?" asked the veteran buyer.

"He's about six months old," grunted the owner from the fence.

"He's about the same age of our fat pig—look at the difference," Mr. Favinger said. "This hog will weigh about 135 pounds, and he is not going to dress out nearly as well in the packing plant. And the quality of meat we get is not as popular as the meat from this fat one."

Speaking Frankly.

A letter from E. C. Bird, county agent of St. Joseph county, commenting on one of these meetings, reads:

JOHN SCHWAB.

"Perhaps it seems a little rough to pick out a bunch of hogs and say exactly what you think about them right before the owner and all of his neighbors, but that's what we did at our live stock field day at North Liberty, Ind., and no one took offense. In fact, the 150 farmers who came out on almost impassable roads during a snowstorm to attend the meeting were openly enthusiastic about the event.

"When John Schwab and I worked out the plan we were somewhat doubtful about how it would appeal to shippers and farmers, but it worked like a charm and has already been used to advantage in neighboring counties."

In the demonstration work Mr. Bird said: "John didn't use many words. He used 'hogs,' and made every word count. He is right at home with hogs, and in that one-half hour in the pens he did more for the swine industry around North Liberty than has been done in many months before. Mr. Schwab pointed out the hog that ships well and sells well. He went back of that and discussed the kind of breeding and sires needed to produce the right kind of market hog. He was able to find some lots that showed the opposite conditions—pigs with poor feet, low backs, and fine bone, that 'will be all in when they walk down the unloading chutes in Chicago tomorrow morning,' to use Schwab's own words."

At these meetings hogs are used as textbooks for the school.

W-G-N SPEAKER

Maj. Edward N. Wentworth, speaking recently on The Tribune's farm and garden radio program, told farmers and business men that the pendulum of supply and demand was swinging back in favor of the live stock producer.

WE AIM TO PLEASE

W-G-N's farm and garden radio talks, which are being sent out each week by THE TRIBUNE, Zenith broadcasting station located on the Edgewater Beach hotel, are given for the benefit of those interested in agriculture—and that takes in everybody. THE TRIBUNE wants these programs broadcast at a time that will suit you best. They now go on the air between 7 and 8 o'clock each evening. How does that suit you? Is it too late or too early? Let station W-G-N know what you think about it. Majority will rule. Write either a letter or postal card. Address Frank Ridgway, Station W-G-N, THE TRIBUNE, Chicago, Ill.

"We couldn't have got to first base without that load of hogs down at the yards to drive home the lesson," added the county agent, "with glaring examples of good and bad methods of feeding right at hand, we didn't need a sledge hammer to show what we were driving at. It was right there before our eyes.

"We aren't much concerned about the question as to where production ends and marketing begins. We are perfectly willing to allow the radical marketing fanatic and the conservative professor of farm economics continue their harmless argument. We think they are both wrong.

"Take this swine proposition, for instance. When we got through with our live stock field day, no one was foolish enough to try to unscramble the production marketing omelet. Our people know that breeding, feeding, care, management, and marketing all cut a real figure in the swine industry. They are going to pay attention to all of them. Our farmers know they must produce and market more economically, and a dollar netted one way buys just as much as one made another. They are interested, too, in learning all they can about breeding or feeding or selling hogs, providing it is worked out in an interesting and practical way. We are sure this St. Joe field day plan is sound and that it will work any place, provided you can get a couple of good men like Favinger and Schwab to assist with the work."

I. A. A. Changes

F. A. Gougler of Urbana, Ill., has been employed by the Illinois Agricultural association to direct the poultry and egg marketing department, succeeding J. D. Harper, who is now executive secretary of the National Live Stock Producers' association.

H. C. Butcher of Iowa has been employed as director of information of the association to fill the vacancy left by Ed Bill, who resigned several weeks ago to become director of the Sears, Roebuck & Co. radio broadcasting station.

Mr. Butcher is a senior in the Iowa State college of agriculture at Ames.

Business Methods Stressed as Cure for Farm Problem

IF you want to bring permanent relief to the farmer, "put the same system into farming that has brought success to big business—chewing gum, soft drinks, lip sticks, and circuses," says John M. Kelley, who has been attorney for Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey for twenty years, as well as a dairy farmer in Wisconsin.

It is his opinion that the relief of farmers does not lie in federal price fixing or in legislation. It is a question of applying modern business methods to farming. "Coöperative merchandising is the solution, but farm methods of production are too antiquated, involving too much confusion, duplication of routine service; and sustain too much waste to apply principles of coöperative marketing," says Mr. Kelley. "Coöperative marketing will never be a blanket remedy to excuse neglect and inefficiency in methods of manufacture or output."

Contribution of Labor.

In his talk to farmers and business men, broadcast by THE TRIBUNE's radio station recently, Mr. Kelley, a leader in the coöperative movement among dairymen in Wisconsin, said:

"The world is taking a new viewpoint toward the farmer, and is coming to understand that the general welfare of the producer of farm products, including dairy products, is reflected in every other line of activity.

"Those who believe or assume that the farmer is prosperous have failed to study his conditions at close range. The opinion generally prevails that farmers produce economically. They do not. They produce at low cost because they forego interest on investment and forget surplus and reserve fund. They make a contribution of their own labor and even call upon their wives and children to offer gratuitous services that agriculture may survive.

Needs More Amusement.

"No other industry on earth would last twelve months operating under the same business methods—or lack of business methods—that obtain in farming.

"When you take the profit from business you take its pride, its heart and its romance. Civilization has taken the joy and the spirit and the romance out of farm life.

"The romance of the circus injected into the building of farm programs would mean much to farmers. Put all the educators of the country on a platform to discuss farm problems, and they will draw but a few farmers. Bring a circus in to the community, and the farmers will rush to get under the tent.

Youth Goes Cityward.

"But profit or amusement is not all the farmer has lost. He is now fast losing the greatest asset he ever had—the farm boy and girl. Six hundred thousand left the farm last year, compared with 200,000 the year before. For twenty years there has been a constant trend off the farm of everything worth while. The city has developed at the expense of the country. Popular amusement and entertainment have centered in the city. The world seems to forget there should be fair income, laughter, smiles, holidays, and the spirit of romance out in the country where 41,000,000 people labor and live."

And then to emphasize the necessity of "Putting the Romance of the Circus Into Farm Life," which was the title of his radio talk, Mr. Kelley threw in these figures:

"New York City spent $20,000,000 last year to see prize fighters pound each other in the ring. Seventy thousand saw the world's series on one day, with more than 50,000 in a jam at the gates unable to get in. The higher they put the price the more they jam.

"Ziegfeld Follies opened in New York, charging $20 a seat. A farmer would have to sell a ten acre field of wheat to give his family three hours of fun at the Follies."

FERRY'S purebred SEEDS

FOR BETTER GARDENS

"A chip off the old block"

EVERY packet of Ferry's Seeds comes from a parent plant that has proved to be ideal in every respect. By ideal we mean that the parent plant is a purebred—true to name and type.

Here is a relationship that every gardener should keep in mind as he plans his garden. It always pays to be sure about the ancestry of the seeds you buy.

At our experimental gardens we watch our plants. The history of every one is known. Before going to seed, undesirables and "freaks" are weeded out. From only those which are ideal are the seeds harvested. Then, to make sure, we test these seeds to see that they do run true to the perfect type.

Such care as this on our part invites you to buy Ferry's purebred Seeds with faith that they will produce in quantity and quality. Ferry's purebred Seeds are on sale "at the store around the corner."

Write for Ferry's Seed Annual. It is full of garden facts. Get it now before you plant.

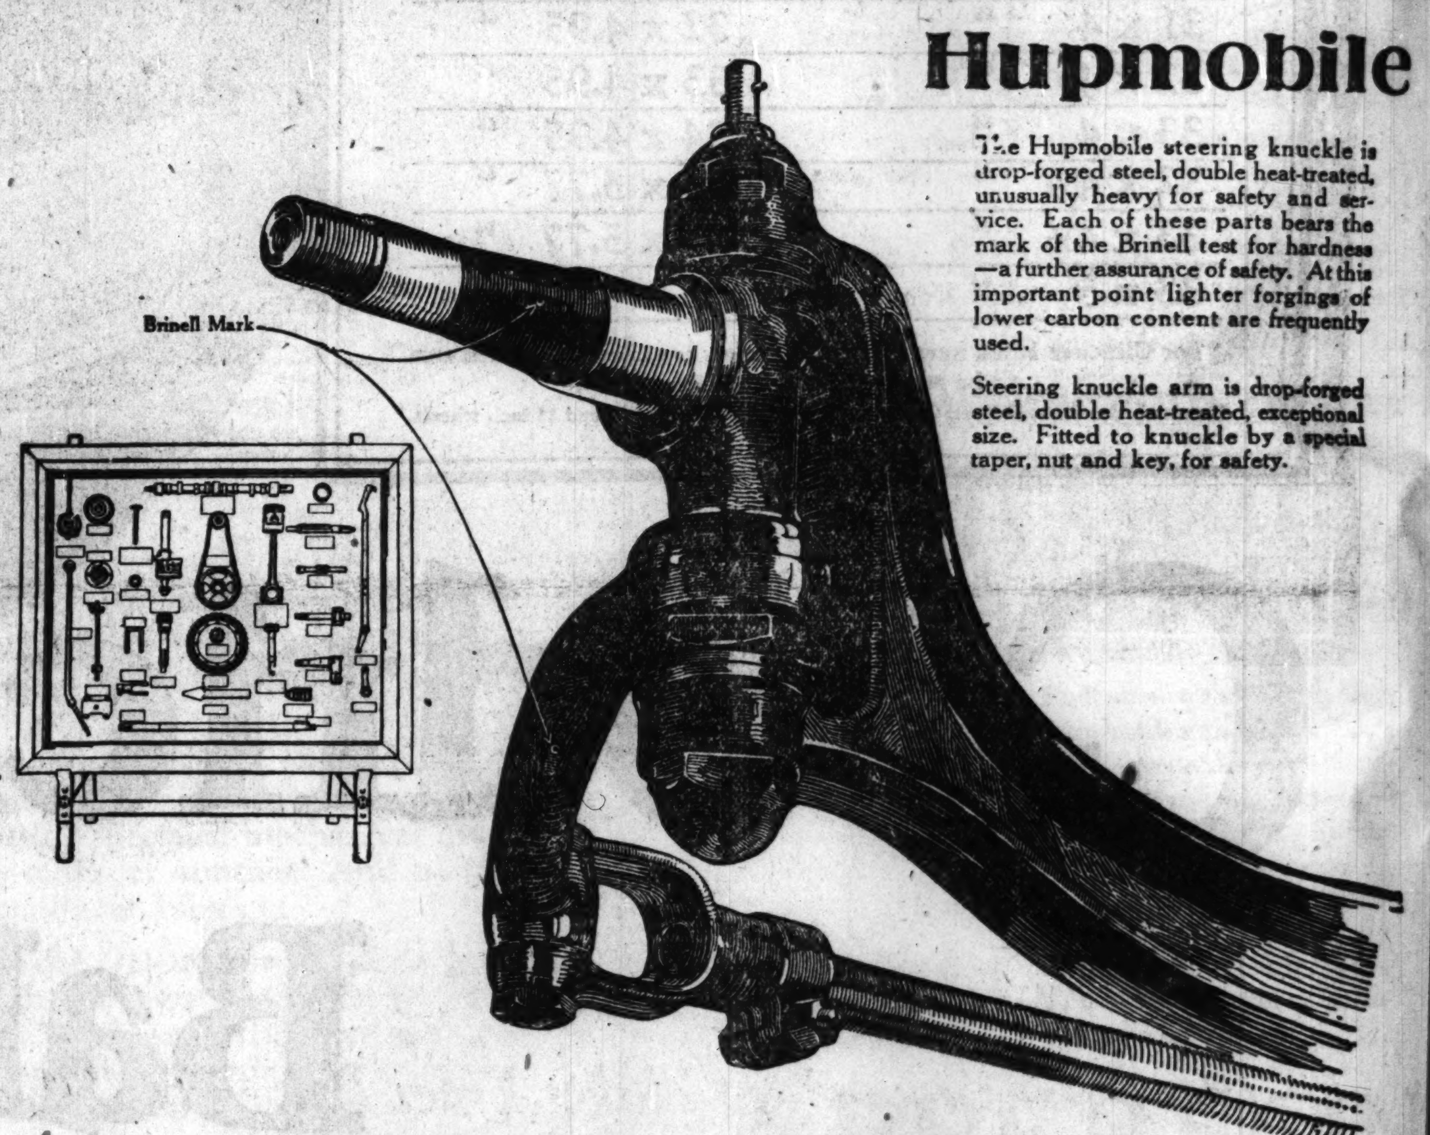
Hupmobile

The Hupmobile steering knuckle is drop-forged steel, double heat-treated, unusually heavy for safety and service. Each of these parts bears the mark of the Brinell test for hardness—a further assurance of safety. At this important point lighter forgings of lower carbon content are frequently used.

Steering knuckle arm is drop-forged steel, double heat-treated, exceptional size. Fitted to knuckle by a special taper, nut and key, for safety.



Profit to the Buyer

It Is Bound Up in the Finer Quality of Hupmobile Parts

Hupmobile could not use materials less fine—and still be Hupmobile.

For the very heart and soul of Hupmobile success is the way it stands up—year after year—at astonishing low cost.

Let it try to cheapen any of its finely built parts and it would at once lose that superiority. It would lose many of the elements which now enable it to give such widespread and complete owner-satisfaction. So in the end, it would not profit the buyer.

The motor car question, as we see it, comes down to this.

The buyer can pay the Hupmobile price, safe in the assurance that a higher price cannot bring him anything higher than the Hupmobile in honest quality.

Or, he can pay less than the Hupmobile price, and content himself with less than Hupmobile quality and less than Hupmobile satisfaction.

It will cost you nothing but the time you put in, to come in and see Hupmobile quality with your own eyes, as shown by our Parts Display. And it is almost certain to save you money on the next car you buy.

MOTORDOM

Be a Big Brother to the New Driver, Urges Motor Body

WITH sales of new motor cars running upward at a record breaking rate throughout the country, the American Automobile association will ask all experienced drivers to set a good example to the newcomer at this time when it appears that traffic safety is the most important motor necessity, it was announced in a bulletin just issued from A. A. A. headquarters at Washington.

Ernest N. Smith, general manager, declares that there was never a better opportunity to put every experienced driver's complaint against recklessness to the acid test. He points out that the new driver is naturally imitative and that if the people who have had experience with driving will set a decent example considerable progress will be made in the work of safeguarding the highways.

This is in line with the policy of solving the safety problem by natural means.

"The average driver is always complaining because the newcomer does senseless things when at the wheel, but seldom realizes that he is often leading the newcomer into being his own stumbling block," Smith says. "Unless the seasoned drivers take particular care to see that they do the right thing at the right time the unskilled driver will not know when he is taking chances.

"Every newcomer at the wheel of an automobile sets out to do as the Romans do, and if the Romans continue to take chances we shall have the usual number of grade crossing catastrophes and other inexcusable accidents and fatalities incident to careless motoring.

"The experienced driver has a unique rôle to play this spring if he earnestly desires to see conditions improved. He must recognize, first of all, that the newcomer represents a hazard to him and that it is always to his advantage to keep away from the beginner. The beginner does not know enough to keep out of the experienced driver's way. So there is only one answer.

"The experienced driver can do a real service to the country by giving the newcomer every possible advantage, even if it means sacrificing rights and being inconvenienced. Safety is worth everything."

CAMPERS BREAK RECORD.

Approximately 10,000,000 auto campers hit the trails of the country during 1923, according to the touring bureau of the Chicago Motor club.

All indications portend a considerable increase in the ranks of motor gypsies during 1924, and some states taking official cognizance of this condition, have enacted laws governing certain phases of motor campers' activities.

California, for example, has recently passed a law that forbids tourists to carry luggage projecting beyond the hub caps on the left hand side. On the right six inches beyond the hub cap is allowed. This same state also prohibits the carrying of firearms in an automobile without a permit from the state authorities.

WORK-BENCH WISDOM

HINTS TO BUYERS.

BY ERWIN GREER.

EVERY dealer promises satisfactory service. Free service for the first few months or the first year with certain restrictions, but fully satisfactory service always. He will tell you that his particular brand of service is at least equal, and usually he will say it is superior to that of competitors. It is as much a part of his selling talk as stating that he has the best car for the money. So beware! Do not accept these statements, but investigate by talking to present owners. A glance through his shop will often prove whether what he says is likely to be true or not, and additional information along this line may be obtained from owners. This precaution will often prevent a rude awakening.

The shop is not the only angle, however, from which to judge the dealer. The condition of his showroom, whether it is neat and clean, whether his cars are shining or not, the personnel of his employés, and the general atmosphere are important indications. Perfection in these little details shows business ability; shows that he is up to date, and consequently will give you the sort of treatment you expect.

The financial status of the business is also important. If it is a thriving, flourishing, going concern it is safe to assume that parts and repairs may be obtained for years to come. A healthy business usually has a good shop; the shop is the heart of the business. If money is lacking the shop is the first to feel the pinch, because it rarely makes a profit anyhow. It is merely a means to further sales.

Beware of the dealer who is willing to make a big allowance on your old car. If he gives you more than the car is worth he is really selling the new car at a discount. It has been proved time and time again that it is impossible for a car to be sold at less than list price and for the dealer still to make any money. If he sells the car at a discount there is a false value somewhere. A car sold for less than list price is rarely a bargain; invariably that car would be cheaper and more satisfactory if purchased at full price. A discount means a reduction in value.

The most important function of the dealer after the car has been delivered is to give service—free service for minor adjustments, perhaps, but prompt and satisfactory service whether the work be gratis or not. When a car breaks down the seriousness of the breakage is not truly measured by its size or importance, but by the money it costs and the time it takes to place the car in running order again. With this fact in mind it is easy to see how essential it is to be careful in selecting a dealer.

Driving Tip.

The habit of using the engine and clutch as a brake when waiting for traffic to proceed uphill is very common and very injurious to the car in general. The driver leaves the car in low gear, but rather than take his foot off the accelerator to hold the car with the brake, he engages the clutch just enough to make the engine keep the car stationary. In a case of this sort the sensible thing to do is to keep one foot on the service brake and feed gas from the throttle, letting in the clutch while releasing the brake as traffic starts moving.

Increased Production Makes Finer Paige Possible at Lower Price

YOU have known Paige for years as a marvelous performer—a big, comfortable car—long lived. Now consider the New Paige—still the same big car but with added refinements, improved performance, smarter appearance. Yes—all this and at a much lower price!

Here's the story: Last year Paige production was limited to 25 cars a day because Jewett production used the entire main plant. This gave us the opportunity to further develop Paige quality methods of construction. The 25 cars a day were practically built by hand. The greatest precision was used in every manufacturing step. The result was a finer Paige than ever.

Now—our manufacturing facilities are greatly increased. Paige again occupies its own plant exclusively. And the quality construction methods developed with a production of only 25 cars a day are now being rigidly adhered to with an increased capacity—100 New Paiges a day.

Such an increase in production means savings in overhead, savings through increased purchases. These savings we have applied to bettering the Paige even further—as well as to reducing the price. That's how it is possible to sell the finely constructed New Paige Phaeton—an even better car than last year's $2450 Paige—at the remarkably low price of $1795.

Compare the New Paige point by point with cars which you consider the finest. Telephone or call on us. We'll arrange an appointment for a demonstration. You drive. Test the marvelous performance, comfort, handling ease of the New Paige. Then consider the remarkably low price. You'll agree it breaks all value records!

ADVERTISE IN THE TRIBUNE

MORGAN GROUP'S LOAN TO BANK OF FRANCE REPAID

Explanation of the recent temporary loan of $100,000,000 to the Bank of France by a group of American banks, as well as the fact that such part of the credit as was used now has been repaid, is contained in a letter to THE TRIBUNE from Thomas W. Lamont of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., which headed the American banking syndicate.

Mr. Lamont emphasizes that the credit was extended to the Bank of France and not to the French government. The purpose of the credit was to enable the Bank of France to support the French franc against a vast speculative attack.

Loan Effective, Repaid.

The loan proved effective, although only a part of it was actually used and now has been repaid. The Bank of France pledged gold in its vaults as security for the credit.

Mr. Lamont's letter to THE TRIBUNE follows:

"My attention has been called to an editorial article appearing in your issue of March 14, and relating to the recent credit of not less than $100,000,000 extended by an American banking group, headed by J. P. Morgan & Co., to the Bank of France.

"You have, however, if you will allow me to say so, misstated the character of this loan. You state that it is an operation 'to lend $100,000,000 to France,' and you proceed to comment upon the 'French debt of approximately $4,000,000,000' to the United States government as if that debt had some bearing upon the recent transaction. On the contrary, the French government has no part in this transaction.

Reciprocal Credit Favors.

"Will you permit me to explain that the Bank of France, the Bank of Italy, the Bank of England and other central banks of issue abroad maintain in this country various banking accounts in order to clear their routine business.

"From time to time, as occasion may require, credit favors are extended from both ends of the line. The unusual feature of the present credit to the Bank of France was not in the character of the arrangement, but rather in the size and importance of it and in the fact that the credit was extended at a time when the franc had had a serious decline in the exchange market.

"Perhaps you will recall that soon after the outbreak of the great war in September, 1914, another banking transaction took place in which the conditions were reversed. At that time, not the franc, but the dollar was suffering a severe decline on the exchange market, and this decline was especially serious because at that time the city of New York had short term obligations maturing in London and Paris to an aggregate of approximately $80,000,000, without means of meeting such maturities.

Safeguarding the Dollar.

"In order to protect the credit of the city of New York, the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. at that time organized a New York banking syndicate for $100,000,000, which undertook, if events required it, to ship gold to meet New York City's maturities in full. As a matter of fact, the very organization of this banking syndicate to extend credit to the city of New York acted in large measure as a cure for the situation, and beyond a limited amount the shipment of gold was never found necessary.

"In the very same way, the very fact that a strong American banking group was ready to extend important credit to the Bank of France, which in turn promised to ship gold if it should be necessary to meet its obligations several months hence, served to change the psychology of the situation, and, for your information, the Bank of France has already paid off such limited amount of the credit as it had temporarily availed itself of.

Not Government Credit.

"The chief point, however, to which I ask your attention is your erroneous assumption that the credit was arranged for the government of France rather than for the Bank of France. If and when occasions arise in the future by which the Bank of France may be extending temporary credit, say to the Federal Reserve bank of New York or to the Federal Reserve bank of Chicago, it would be equally erroneous to describe such a credit as being extended in effect to the American government."

FINANCIAL NOTES

Good buying support was in evidence for the usual stock market leaders yesterday. United States Steel common closed ⅛ higher at 98⅛. Baldwin was unchanged at 111⅞ and American Can was off ⅛ at 97⅛. Operation for the advance were successfully conducted in Allied Chemical, U. S. Cast Iron Pipe, Famous Players and Brooklyn-Manhattan preferred.

Oil shares were inclined to lose ground despite the announcement of higher prices for Smackover crude. Losses of a point or more were recorded by Pacific, Phillips Petroleum, Houston, Pan-American B., Cosden and Standard Oil of California. Standard Oil of New Jersey broke below 36 to the lowest price this year. A sharp break of nine points in Atlantic Refining followed publication of the annual report showing total income of $12,451,683 last year, as against $17,427,053 in 1922.

American Sugar preferred broke more than a point to 87¾, a new 1924 minimum, and the common dropped one point, selling being influenced by the erratic course of commodity prices following the publication of the government report indicating a record world crop of sugar. Yellow Cab Manufacturing recorded an overnight drop of 9½ points to 50¼, while Chicago Yellow Cab slumped 3⅝ points to 46⅝.

Despite active selling in Interborough and Wilson & Co. issues, bond prices generally held firm. Foreign government obligations and speculative railroad lines attracted the best inquiry. Liquidation of Interborough bonds followed official announcement that the company had failed to earn fixed charges in the last eight months and would have to resort to drastic measures to reduce expenses. After the recent sharp rally in Wilson & Co. mortgages, aided by the efforts of bankers to extend all bank loans for six months, profit taking was a natural development and accounted for a 4 point loss in each of the two convertible issues.

Although public subscriptions for the $10,000,000, Illinois service compensation bonds will not be received until next week, bankers announced that half the issue already had been sold. The offering is made on a yield basis of 4 to 4.40 per cent.

The street had before it some estimates of first quarter earnings of the Steel corporation, and the most popular figure seemed to approximate $55,000,000. On the matter of unfilled tonnage it was rather generally assumed that the next statement would reveal another decrease for April, with early estimates placing this figure as high as a 200,000 ton decrease.

The recent shading of prices of certain grades of finished steel products has brought the average price of eight leading grades of steel down to $56.59 a gross ton. This average price represents a drop of $4.71 a ton from the high point reached last year, which was $61.30 a ton reported at the close of last April. PACKERS ACT TO BE TIGHTENED UP BY AMENDMENTS

Washington, D. C., April 19.—[Special.]—Important amendments to the Packer and Stockyards act are proposed in a bill reported to the house today by the committee on agriculture following the appearance before it of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace. The bill which was reported by Representative Haugen [Rep., Ia.], chairman of the committee, provides for the suspension by the head of the department of agriculture of market agencies and dealers who are subject to the stockyards act when he finds insolvency or "knowing violations" of the law that justifies such action.

The Haugen bill also requires market agencies and dealers to maintain bonds. In addition it requires organizations of marketing agencies that render stockyard services, including dockage, to extend such services to non-members upon reasonable regulations and similar terms.

CHICAGO CURB MARKET

Local unlisted securities were again under pressure last week and while few severe breaks occurred, the entire list was unsettled and moderate price recessions were numerous at the close.

Brunswick-Balke-Collender common at 107 bid, 109 asked, was some 3 points lower. Sales of Northwestern Yeast ranged between 182½ and 184½, off 1½ points. Butler Brothers sagged fractionally to low sales at 32½, but later improved to a closing quotation of 32¾ bid, 33 asked. Offerings of Great Lakes Transit at 36 failed to attract bids better than 33½. Bucyrus common yielded an additional point at 57 bid, 59 asked. The preferred was equally lower at 98½ bid, 100½ asked. In the early trading Fairbanks Morse gave ground, selling at 26½, but closed unchanged for the week at 27 bid, 27¼ asked. Some few transactions of Goodman Manufacturing were reported at 51 and 52. Elgin National Watch changed hands at 45½ and 46½. Western Grocer common was quoted 90 bid, 92 asked throughout, with little stock changing hands. Trading in Chicago Railway Equipment was on a light scale between 45 and 46 on the common, and between 25¼ and 26 on the preferred.

National Tea common was an outstanding feature, advancing approximately 40 points to 363 bid, 365 asked, on the declaration of a $5 quarterly dividend in lieu of the $2 disbursement heretofore paid. Burroughs Adding Machine was also an exception to the general trend, stock being wanted at the close at 135 with sellers at 137, a net advance of 2 points. Bids of 60 again failed to attract prospective sellers of Sullivan Machinery. Interstate Iron and Steel continued its downward movement, receding an additional point at 58 bid, 59 asked. Kellogg company was somewhat less active between 20 and 20½. Palmolive common was wanted at 80 with offerings at 85, but few actual trades were reported. A decline of 1½ points to 85 bid, 86 asked, featured trading in Wahl preferred. Albert Pick preferred continued dull with a few odd lots changing hands between 90¾ and 91½. Creamery Package full voting shares were steadier at 31 bid, 31½ asked; while the non-voting shares were fractionally lower at 30¼ bid, 30¾ asked.

While the volume of trade was on a somewhat restricted scale, motor and accessory quotations moved into somewhat higher ground. Timken Axle improved a full point to 5½ bid, 5¾ asked; while Ford of Canada at 440 bid, 447 asked, represented an upturn of 4 points. Paige-Detroit at 13 bid, 13½ asked, was up a minor fraction. Some few transactions of Motor Products were again reported at 67½ and 69. F. B. Stearns was freely offered at 15 with little interest on the buying side.

The sugar shares continued dull with little change in quoted values. Closing bid and asked prices follow: Columbia, 6¾@7; Godchaux preferred, 36@40; Holland-St. Louis, 4@4½; Michigan, 5¾@6; Utah-Idaho, 3¾@4.

The price movement in the public utility group was of a mixed character. American Light and Traction common closed 2 points lower at 127 bid, 128 asked. Commonwealth Power Corporation common was under pressure, breaking 3 points to 74½ bid, 75½ asked, ex-dividend $1. The preferred issue ruled steady throughout, however, at 74 bid, 75 asked, ex-dividend, $1.50. Northern Ohio Electric common showed fractional improvement at 8½ bid, 9¼ asked. The preferred was a point higher at 28½ bid, 29½ asked.

Few of the bank stocks were dealt in during the week and prices ruled firm throughout.

With quality only fair and outside demand indifferent, week-end hog offerings sold slowly at steady to 10c lower prices, top and average declining 5c at $7.65 and $7.45, respectively, both equaling previous Saturday, the high day of that week. Commoner kinds comprised most of the 7,000 estimated unsold, although some desirable grades were held off the market on orders from the country. Outsiders took less than 2,500 hogs.

Choice weighty butchers' hogs, due to scarcity, again topped at $7.65, while fancy 190 lb light reached $7.60 and 165 pounders $7.50. Better grades closed steady with previous Saturday, while common and in-between grades of mixed butchers and "packers," which made up most of last week's offerings, were 5@10c under a week ago.

Last week's hog receipts at 148,400 stand smallest since October, 1922, being 10,900 smaller than previous week, 12,700 smaller than a year ago, and 10,100 above the ten year average. Estimated average weight at 233 lbs was 1 lb lighter than previous week, 6 lbs lighter than a year ago, and the same as the ten year average.

Increased cattle offerings last week carried a more liberal proportion of better grades than usual, which met active outlet at firm prices practically throughout the week, closing on par with a week ago. Well finished weighty beef steers topped early in the week at $12.60, against a limit of $12.40 the week previous, comparing with a top of $10.40 at the high time in April, 1923, and $9.40 in April, 1922.

Commoner grades of cattle closed unevenly lower than a week ago. However, in spite of this fact, the general average price, due to improved quality, advanced 25c to $10.30, highest weekly average since last October.

After experiencing the sharpest break in several months early last week lamb prices reacted and closed on a firm basis, with trend higher, due to dwindling supplies and predictions of scarcity next week. However, notwithstanding the 15@25c advance at the close, prevailing prices are still 40@60c below a week ago, top at $16.50 comparing with $17.10 Friday, April 11, the year's top.

General average price of lambs last week at $16.00 stood 30c below previous week, $2.85 above a year ago, and $2.40 above the ten year average. Sheep averaged $10.25, within 15c of previous week, $2.60 above a year ago, and 5c under the ten year average.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 23,000 cattle, 54,000 hogs, and 16,000 sheep, against 22,618 cattle, 52,266 hogs, and 16,569 sheep a week ago, and 21,477 cattle, 52,996 hogs, and 17,711 sheep a year ago. Next week's receipts are estimated at 57,000 cattle, 150,000 hogs, and 65,000 sheep, against 61,076 cattle, 155,106 hogs, and 65,135 sheep a year ago.

FUTURE TRANSIT CHEAPER, BETTER, MODELS REVEAL

BY SCRUTATOR.

It might be a good idea for several transportation interests to look over their publicity output and find out whether a little coördination would not be advisable.

They may not realize it, but it appears at times as if they were conducting a joint debate with themselves.

There was a rather funny instance of this once before. Just before the government took over the railroads, one set of men were reciting the wonderful transportation performance of the roads, while another, in the effort to obtain relief from governmental restrictions, were pointing out how the railroads were handicapped for lack of equipment.

There was truth in both lines of talk, but as they were presented to the average man they amounted to flat contradictions.

The writer recently touched on the edges of the controversy between two different forms of transportation which are in active competition on city streets.

Since that time a heavy mail has been received from all sides, with reams of interesting statistics, graphs, and pictures.

It is interesting stuff. It discloses intense competition. It also reveals the pride and confidence of each business in its own methods, with constant striving for improvement.

That the inventive urge of the American people also is still strong is proved. The writer has seen in the last few days models for new forms of automotive transport that may work a revolution in short haul frequent stop traffic.

The urge to economy also is apparent, and devices are in blue print and castings that sheer cheapness of operation may make the flivver look like the limousine of a bloated bondholder.

We are in for an age of keen competition in all forms of transportation and the development of greatly improved automotive traffic, gas, electric, and steam.

At the same time all classes of such equipment are getting better results than formerly, because of better management and better trained personnel.

Costs of distribution are going to be lowered; there is no doubt of that.

The controversy between the different forms of transport is a healthy manifestation. It also knocks into a cocked hat the silly fable of the "solidarity" of big business, the mud sill myth of all forms of soap box social philosophy.

But there is one note in the controversy that bodes little good to the transportation industry, and to American business in general. It seems to show that American business men themselves are becoming infected with the paternalistic itch, that already has laid so many burdens on business.

Nearly every transportation interest has a pet idea for the regulation or restriction of the other fellow. Some of these proposals are quite plausible. Some are almost unanswerable on their face.

But taking the long view, the writer is convinced that all such restrictive proposals are unsound, and will work greater evils than they can cure. As the long tale of socialistic failure unfolds here and abroad it again is evident that nearly every legislative "short cut" to a desired end is likely to prove a "short circuit," burning out and damaging the industrial machine as a whole.

This may be a fanatic or single track view, but it seems to the writer that the post war breakdown of the socialist cult, just as it was flowering into its long sought forms, has almost completely revindicated the primitive theories of capitalism and recanonized Adam Smith, Thomas Jefferson, and Jeremy Bentham as the real fathers of the true social faith.

As for Herbert Spencer, his philosophical system may lie in ruins, but his prophecies, when stood up against what has happened, prove him to have been the world's greatest seer. His predictions of paternalistic advance and its consequences have been fulfilled.

It was a restrictive highway law in Britain quite as much as the lack of a light, powerful motor that delayed the automobile seventy-five years. Our picayunis hsystem of regulation is delaying the electrification of rails now. Horsemen ought to realize that there are proposals to restrict them, too. Wouldn't it be a good idea for all forms of the transportation industry to leave the advocacy of hobbling laws up to somebody else?

You Cannot Build a Fortune on Guesses.

Do you believe in fortune tellers? Do you believe that there are people so gifted with psychic powers that they can foresee what is going to happen in the future and foretell comming events in your life? No? Then why believe that there are men who accurately can foretell the course of the market.

There are many investors' services which attempt to tell their subscribers which stocks are going to go up and when. They charge a good fee for this service and claim that those who follow their advice will realize profits. Sometimes they do.

It is doubtless true that some men who have made an exhaustive study of economic and financial conditions and who have watched carefully the stock market's reaction to different conditions for years are far better qualified to predict what is likely to happen to stocks under certain situations than is the novice. The guess of such men is, therefore, worthy of more consideration than is the guess of an amateur. But it is a guess at best—a guess founded on study and experience, but still a guess.

You cannot build your fortune on guesses with any degree of certainty. If the guess proves to be correct and you have followed the advice given, you have made some money. If it proves wrong, you have lost. If any individual could consistently predict the course of the market with accuracy he would not sell his services to the public for a living. He would make a fortune on the stock market following his own "tips."

Those who wish to speculate and who want to pay for tips and advice from a reputable investors' service or "tip bureau" should realize that they still are speculating, although, perhaps, their chances of successful speculation may be somewhat better than if operating on their own "hunches."

There are, however, so-called investors' services conducted by men without any qualifications for giving advice and who use this service merely to get the subscription price or as a blind to get their subscribers into stocks where they have no chance. Many of them are bucket shops, pure and simple.

If you do subscribe to the services of a tip bureau be sure it is conducted by one who is qualified to give intelligent advice, based on real experience and study, and whose reputation in these matters is of the best—and then realize that this advice is not infallible but is merely an aid to check too reckless speculations.

SHORT COVERING RAISES PRICES IN WHEAT MART

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

A wave of short covering swept over the wheat market. With closing of spreads between wheat and corn and back spreading with Winnipeg, May advanced to $1.04⅞, the highest figure since March 24. May wheat closed at $1.04⅝@1.04⅝, going 2c under the July compared with 2¼c in the early trading. Closing figures showed net gains of 1½@1⅝c. Corn was ⅛@⅜c higher, oats ⅛c lower to ⅛c higher, and rye ⅝c higher.

There has been some change in sentiment among wheat traders during the last week, with fears that the McNary-Haugen bill might have a radical effect on values.

Between the various influences the close was about the top, with net gains of 2½@2⅝c for the week. Corn was up ⅝@1⅛c, oats ⅛@⅝c, and rye ⅝@1c for the week. Lard declined 2½@5c, while ribs gained 10@17½c and bellies 17½@22½c.

No Pressure on Wheat.

There was a noticeable lack of pressure on wheat. The advance therefore was attained easily. A local house with northwestern connections started to buy May and sell July at 2¼c difference early and the surplus May in the pit was rapidly absorbed. Later those who have been short wheat against purchases of corn started to close spreads, causing the latter grain to weaken, but without having much effect on wheat. The Winnipeg-Chicago May spread widened to 3⅛c at the last, compared with 2¾c earlier in the week. May closed at $1.04⅝@1.04⅝, July at $1.06⅝@1.06⅝, and September at $1.07⅝@1.07⅝.

Houses with export connections were buyers of futures at Winnipeg. Traders on the whole showed more disposition to pay attention to crop damage reports from the states east of the Mississippi river, and the complaints of dry weather in parts of the northwest and on the Pacific coast. Export sales at the seaboard were 300,000 bu, presumably all Manitobas, and charters have been made the last week for around 3,000,000 bu. With lake navigation open the trade anticipates a fair decrease to be shown in the domestic visible supply for the week.

Corn market was decidedly unsettled, due largely to spreading operations with wheat. Locals got long early, and sold out later only to see the market rally and close about the top, with May 78⅝@78½, July at 79⅞@79⅝, and September at 79⅛@79¼. Demand for cash corn from the east was again slow, with receipts of 122 cars.

May Oats Close Easy.

May oats failed to get into new ground and weakened after an early bulge on selling induced by reports that Canadians were offered at equal to 1c under domestic grain in New England. May finished at 47⅝@47½c. Export sales of 100,000 bu Canadian were reported at the seaboard. Weather conditions were generally favorable for field work.

Rye was dull and derived the greater part of its strength from wheat. Export inquiry remains slow.

Provisions were dull, but meats showed a firmer undertone and closed with ribs 5@7½c higher. Lard was unchanged and bellies 2½c lower. Packing of hogs at Chicago for the summer season to date aggregates 1,142,000, compared with 1,258,000 last year. Prices follow:

They were 12 per cent below the five year average. The big reductions were in wheat and oats, while in corn there was the best run at this time in four years, with the exception of last year.

Chicago received 2,235,000 bu grain for the week, the lightest in recent years.

CASH·GRAIN NEWS

Export sales of wheat at the seaboard were estimated at 300,000 bu and oats at 100,000 bu, both Canadian. Considering the fact foreign markets were closed, the business was regarded as a satisfactory total. Charters were made last week for around 3,000,000 bu grain.

Chicago cash handlers sold 30,000 bu wheat, 40,000 bu corn, and 65,000 bu oats to the domestic trade.

Offerings of cash wheat here were somewhat larger, but demand was good and the basis firm at 1@3c over May for No. 2 red and 1@9c over for No. 2 hard. Receipts 50 cars. Omaha was ½@1½c higher, with St. Louis and Kansas City unchanged to 1c higher.

Demand for cash corn was a little slow with receipts of 122 cars, but prices on the whole showed little change. No. 3 mixed brought ¼c under and yellow ¼c under to 1¾c over May, with No. 4 grades 1@1¼c and No. 5 grades 2¼c under May. Outside markets were easier, and unchanged to 1½c lower.

Bulk of the No. 2 white oats here sold at 2½@3c over May and No. 3 white at 1¼@1¾c over, but as low as 2c over May was quoted for No. 2 white at the last, as a leading buyer pulled out of the market. Receipts 154 cars.

WORLD'S·GRAIN MARKET·NEWS

Wheat traders have been evening up in the last few days. That is leaving the market in a technical position in which it will take more buying to keep prices on the upgrade. There has been an advance of 3c within the week. The open interest on both sides is lighter. Recent selling pressure has been lighter and mainly from a few local professionals who have covered at slight changes in prices.

It is the impression that until the McNary-Haugen bill is acted on by congress and is out of the way it will create an uneasy feeling in the grain trade. The impression is that it will pass and a good many in the trade are disposed to regard it as unfavorable to the short interests.

One of the strengthening influences in its effect on Europe and in the United States is the action of the German government on the Dawes commission report.

Indifference on the part of cash buyers of corn is the main drawback to the speculative interests. Close observers in the pit say they are unable to discover any material enlargement in outside buying, even on breaks. They are going slow on buying. The opinion was expressed at the close that had it not been for the strength in wheat, corn would have finished lower.

Lake navigation has opened and boats are clearing for eastern lake ports. There have been 730,000 bu of wheat loaded for Buffalo; 117,000 bu No 3 yellow corn, for Tiffin; and 200,000 bu wheat has cleared for Buffalo.

The trade is looking for a decrease in the visible supply of all grains for the week as shipments largely exceed the receipts of wheat and oats. Shipments of corn from Chicago for the week were smaller than the receipts.

The Red Book Annex, issued by Howard, Bartels & Co., for the first quarter of this year with all grain statistics, has made its appearance.

Corn receipts at the primary markets since Oct 27, 1923, aggregate 177,111,000 bu, compared with 171,832,000 bu last year. Chicago has received 57,296,000 bu, against 79,648,000 bu last season.

A bearish situation in corn is depicted by William C. Weigand of the Rosenbaum Grain corporation. He says there has been an unusual situation in the feed trade. Last year at this time bran was $30@31 at Chicago, as compared with $23@23.50 this year; gluten feed was $31, against $28 now; oil meal was $44.50, against $37.50@38; cottonseed meal $51, against $45 now; gluten meal $40, against $36.50. He says the coöperative plan of buying the winter supply in the late summer and early fall, which was the practice in New England and other eastern states, has undoubtedly had some effect. The open winter and low prices for milk are also factors.

Winnipeg reported considerable selling of wheat futures by commission houses and some liquidation by the country, with all offerings readily absorbed by exporters and shippers, who appear to be in the market for good amounts.

"After interviewing many dealers, some bankers, and farmers in the Missouri river section the last two days, I find them for the most part opposed to such legislation as the McNary-Haugen bill," said a message from Sioux City.

NEWS OF THE CROPS

Burton Hungerford, the Logan & Bryan crop expert in a message from Decatur, Ill., estimates that from present indications that Illinois will abandon around 17 per cent of its total winter wheat acreage, with some counties probably abandoning 25 to 50 per cent of the area seeded last fall. Condition in Illinois is more serious than in Ohio and Indiana. Indications are for quite an increase in corn acreage.

Prospects for the Illinois winter wheat crop are about the poorest in twenty-five years, according to J. E. Carney, who returned yesterday from a daylight trip from Chicago to St. Louis. This covers some of the best wheat territory in the state. As he sees it, Illinois will do well to secure two-thirds of an average crop.

"Since April 1, seeding has been going full blast with no rain," wired Crop Expert R. W. Kinyon to Jackson Bros. & Co., from Bradley, S. D." Fall rye coming along nicely and the stand is a great deal better than last year."

A large part of the winter wheat acreage of eastern Washington and western Idaho has been reseeded to spring wheat, according to a Spokane, Wash., message to Logan & Bryan. Spring seeding is making slow progress on account of high winds during the day and freezing temperatures at night during the last two weeks. Rains must come soon or the situation is likely to become serious.

DRY GOODS AND GARMENT NEWS

BOSTON.—The emergency board of the United Textile Workers of America has notified all members of local unions not to accept any wage cuts or increase in hours. The emergency board will finance a fight wherever such an attempt is made.

LONDON.—A silk worm exhibition, carried on by twenty-one Chinese men and women, will be part of the British empire exhibition next month. The exhibitors will be brought here by Sir Robert Ho Tung of Hongkong and Lady Ho Tung will be in charge of the exhibit.

BERLIN.—Larger importations of American and Czech woolen yarns resulted in a general price decline at the Stuttgart and Leipzig factors. Using No. 20 yarn as an example, the price dropped from $1.32 a kilo to $1.20. Quotations on cotton yarns also dropped.

LONDON.—Woolen interests of Great Britain are solidly against the organization by Australian wool growers and brokers of the Wool Control, Ltd., with the avowed purpose of controlling sales and fixing prices of the Australian clips and influencing the world markets as much as possible. London houses say a free market is the best thing for the trade and that attempts in the past to set arbitrary prices always have proved failures.

Mr. Prescott Can Take His Physician's Prescription

(Actual names held in confidence)

MORE GOLF, less work and worry—this was the prescription that our client, Mr. Prescott, got from his doctor for his nervous trouble.

But how many men on the verge of a breakdown are able to take such advice? Either they cannot let go the reins of business, or if they are men of wealth often their investments are speculative and a source of perpetual worry.

Mr. Prescott never was a man of large income, but fortunately he realized early in life that the world's worry free investment is the mortgage and that steady investment of even small sums in First Mortgage Bonds will eventually give anyone independence.

The fact is that he now enjoys a larger income from the bonds he has always bought of us than he ever earned as salary. He is in a position to take the rest his doctor demands and has nothing whatever to worry about.

This booklet, "How to Live at Ease," contains really amazing tables showing exactly what to invest at your age to accumulate $5,000 to $50,000 by the time you may wish to retire. Let us send you, without charge, this and other fortune building literature. Just mail coupon.

Further collapse of the Yellow stocks was the feature of trading in Chicago stocks in the week-end session yesterday, although the attack was extended to other issues with which the same interests are identified. A new rush of selling, representing both short selling and closing out of weak margined accounts, drove Yellow Manufacturing down to 49 and Yellow Cab down to 46½, both new low marks. Both issues closed at the day's low prices, marking a net loss of 10½ points for the former and 5⅝ for the latter. Chicago Motor Coach was off 15 points to 135 on a small sale. Balaban & Katz was attacked and driven down 7½ points to 42, a new low. Wrigley also was sold freely, but met support, and while a new low was touched at 35½, the net loss for the day was only half a point. Stewart-Warner was the only other active issue and gained half a point.

Somewhere West of Laramie

SOMEWHERE west of Laramie there's a broncho-busting, steer-roping girl who knows what I'm talking about.

She can tell what a sassy pony, that's a cross between greased lightning and the place where it hits, can do with eleven hundred pounds of steel and action when he's going high, wide and handsome.

The truth is—the Playboy was built for her.

Built for the lass whose face is brown with the sun when the day is done of revel and romp and race.

She loves the cross of the wild and the tame.

There's a savor of links about that car—of laughter and lilt and light—a hint of old loves—and saddle and quirt. It's a brawny thing—yet a graceful thing for the sweep o' the Avenue.

Step into the Playboy when the hour grows dull with things gone dead and stale.

Then start for the land of real living with the spirit of the lass who rides, lean and rangy, into the red horizon of a Wyoming twilight.

You can't blame a healthy girl for wanting to have a car of her own.

Why—you really can't go anywhere or do anything worth while nowadays without one.

Mother is always using hers—

Of course father can't give up his own.

How is a fellow going to get out to the country club when a fellow really wants to be there on time?

Father gets tired chauffering his daughters around to parties, and think of all the sleep he loses waiting for the party to be over so he can take his daughters home.

He might be playing bridge, Mah Jong, or reading Gibbon's "Rome."

There was a time in mother's day when the girls she knew lived just down the block.

Nowadays it's seven miles to the place where daughter wants to go.

Happily, she drives just as well as father, and just as cautiously—and no one knows better than father how well she looks.

She won't be satisfied with an ordinary car.

That's why the Playboy was built for her.

Shirley could only watch, paralyzed with horror. The enemy played his last desperate card and fired into the air; then grandfather was upon him, fighting with all the strength of love.

The Story of a Golden Haired Sinner Who Tampered Once Too Often with the Truth

"O GOD the Father of Heaven, have mercy upon us miserable sinners!"

Shirley liked especially this part of the service. She always tried sincerely to concentrate upon her prayers, and managed as a rule to keep under fairly good control five-sixths of her thoughts. The truant sixth this particular morning was deciding that the new man in the choir had an extremely weird profile; that she must remember to get some red candies for grandfather's birthday cake; that she must be firm and not allow Elliot to sweep her into matrimony before autumn; and that the response she was murmuring with so much fervor was rather strikingly inappropriate to a certain member of the congregation.

Though her own offspring, Shirley in all honesty would have disclaimed with horror this last reflection; she was sincerely unaware how largely it contributed to that pleasant sense of well-being in which she was innocently basking. Certainly it was difficult to conceive of misery—well nigh impossible of sin—in connection with Shirley. Each time she besought mercy from Heaven a flicker of amused, infinitely tender indulgence crept into Grandfather Wayne's eyes, still fiercely blue despite his eighty years; into Grandmother Wayne's, faded and dovelike; into Elliot Monroe's, worshiping and proudly proprietary; into the admiring gaze of that portion of the congregation fortunate enough to command a view of Shirley at prayer. Even the old rector's glance lost something of its spiritual aloofness, and softened paternally before the golden-haired young sinner in the Wayne pew whose twenty sweet years had known so far only sunshine.

Shirley, grave eyes intent before her, struggling to commune with her Maker, was nevertheless happily conscious of what they were all thinking, of the affectionate admiration wafted toward her from every part of the church. For Shirley Wayne was more than the prettiest and most admired girl in Rutherford; she was an institution. Mothers held her up to wayward daughters as an example of the fact that a girl could be popular without smoking, drinking, rouging, and joy riding. Men not only lost their heads over her beauty but reverenced her as the one ideal left in a post-war world. People had a way of getting down on their knees before Shirley and at the same time bending over her protectingly to shield her from any untoward jostling on the part of a thoughtless universe. She was at once Rutherford's saint and its happy, fortune kissed child.

Against this rose hued background Shirley prayed enjoyably. She could not have told what malign impulse dragged her eyes suddenly from the altar to meet Ted McAlister's smiling scrutiny across the aisle any more than she could explain the curious jolted feeling with which, a moment later, she returned, rather flushed, to her devotions. It was not that she missed in his gaze her accustomed homage; no one ever expected Ted McAlister to be on his knees before anything or anybody. But there had been something in his look which had roused unaccountably a resentment wholly alien to Shirley's gentleness—as if he had lifted some secret curtain of her heart and uncovered something he and she alone knew; something which amused him, which——

ALL during the rest of the service she groped for the missing word, and later in the afternoon again pursued it as she rammed the little red candies into grandfather's birthday cake. Elliot had with difficulty been lassoed to the veranda, entertaining grandfather and grandmother, while Shirley, alone in the wide, spotless kitchen, prepared the piece de resistance of grandfather's celebration. She had just penned, quite viciously for Shirley, Ted's name on the gay little place card. He had been a neighbor too many years to omit him now. At the tender age of five hours he had been introduced to grandfather, and had been condescendingly aware of Shirley's existence since she had first appeared, an orphaned toddler, to live in the huge white house on the hill. During her childhood and early girlhood they had been on wholly affable terms, though Ted had never, she reflected now, acted in the least as schoolboys in books always did toward yellow-haired little girls next door. He had never pulled her to school on his sled, carried her books for her, fought her battles, or pledged her his juvenile troth with a brass ring. Lovers' vows and small girls were of equal indifference to Ted. But he had always been kind in his brusque, careless way: sent her an occasional post card from Yale, taken her riding when he came home for his holidays, given her from time to time stern elder brotherly advice. He had been her first grownup caller, appearing disgruntledly the evening she arrived home from finishing school.

"It's so nice of you to run in this way," Shirley had thanked him, and he had responded with Tedlike frankness:

"Run in! You've got the wrong verb, my child. Dragged in, you mean. Mother brutally insisted on it. I can bear it, I think, if she won't stay too long and if you will promise not to use more than five hundred superlatives during the evening."

"I'll cut down on them, if you'll promise not to talk about your stupid old law," Shirley had assured him merrily. They had got on famously that evening—all the rest of the winter, in fact. Shirley had not resented at all Ted's standing disdainfully outside the large circle of adorers who were spoiling Rutherford's stationery with bad sonnets to a golden-haired saint with haunting gray eyes. Ted was notoriously womanproof.

"It's not that I care a rap about him, goodness knows. I wouldn't marry him, if he were the last man in the world," was the vindictive feminine verdict of Rutherford. "But O, I'd give anything if I could just make him propose to me!"

It was the habit, indeed, of each succeeding crop of debutantes to abuse in public Ted McAlister, to save dances in the hope that he might ask for them, and to don its prettiest gowns on the rare occasion of his calls. Shirley knew Ted too well to waste any ammunition in his direction. He was not her type, anyway, she had told herself, even before Elliot Monroe had appeared to elucidate in one dazzling moment just what that type was. She had enjoyed, however, the intimacy entailed by living next door to the most brilliant young lawyer in the county, and had listened to his advice with submissive admiration. She had never minded Ted's caustic remarks, nor his merciless teasing, feeling the friendliness underneath.

"Ted is really kind," as a neighbor and old friend she had been wont staunchly to defend him. "He adores his mother and couldn't eat for two days after his dog died." But there had been no kindness in Ted's look in church today, nor, as she thought of it now, for some months past. Underneath its customary smiling cynicism and—she searched again for the elusive woard and in a flash of indignant realization found it—contempt.

It was a stately Shirley, with her chin at an angle it had never achieved before, who greeted her neighbor that evening. Ted, placidly impervious to this glacial reception, had never been more charming—and there was no doubt that Ted could be charming when he chose. Shirley had to unbend during his delightful toast to grandfather. A moment later, however, resentment surged again in her heart. She had just finished an innocent remark to Mrs. Bentley.

"We are all so glad to hear you've postponed that trip to California," she had told her, leaning forward in her pretty, interested way. "We were terrified for fear we weren't going to have Marjorie with us for the play. We never would be able to fill her place."

It was then that Ted had flashed her across the table another of those cryptic glances. She translated it more easily this time, illuminated as it was by a belated remembrance of her laughing recital to his mother of the trials of amateur theatricals.

"If only we could lose Marjorie Bentley!" she had wailed. "There'd be a chance even yet we wouldn't be hissed off the stage. She's so hopeless—and none of us dares tell her so!"

So that was what he thought, Shirley told herself, the rose in her cheeks deepened to scarlet, her mind a whirl of turbulent, chaotic self-vindication. Just because she had tried to entertain his sick mother, because she was trying now to make poor Mrs. Bentley feel happy, he could form so unkind, so unfair a judgment. The serpent wriggling into Eden produced no greater upheaval than this first breath of hostile criticism in Shirley's love warmed world. She swept the table in piteous search of champions. There were ten stanch ones ready at hand, defending her against Ted's silent accusation in every admiring glance smiled over at her. It was grandfather's celebration, but Shirley was as always its golden heart. How could they all give her this love and approbation if she were really the self-satisfied, insincere creature Ted seemed to think she was? Her rare anger mounted slowly throughout the dinner. Ted recklessly continued to cast new fuel upon it.

"Yes, mother browbeat me into going to church this morning," he was saying now in answer to congratulations upon this unusual occurrence. "I've felt depressed all day in consequence. Church always makes me melancholy. I don't enjoy confessing my sins as much as Shirley does. The last thing in the world I want is to call heaven's or the public's attention to them."

It was then that Shirley picked up deliberately the challenging glove he had twice that day flung at her feet. After dinner she resolutely placed herself beside Ted in the window seat, where they could talk undisturbed under the inharmonious cover of Mrs. Gilchrist's singing. An innocent remark of grandfather's served to precipitate hostilities.

"My little Shirley sees me always through rose colored spectacles," he had smiled in answer to one of Shirley's charming compliments.

"You must have rose colored ear drums as well as spectacles," Ted moaned as Mrs. Gilchrist's shrill voice ascended. "Why in thunder do you always urge that woman to sing? You know she can't."

"Because I also know it gives her pleasure," Shirley had fired her opening shot.

"And you are willing to pay any price for that?"

"What price do you mean?" she demanded.

"The truth," he responded grimly. "Saying agreeable things and telling the truth don't always walk hand in hand, do they?"

More than once before he had given her with brotherly frankness a home thrust delivered from the immense advantage of twelve years' seniority. This one, however, was different, unsoftened by Ted's usual gay banter, tingling with a genuine emotion. Shirley went white under its sincerity. It was one thing to be warned of possible perils; quite another to be accused of an ignoble fault of which you are completely innocent.

"In your profession," she told him, trying to steady her voice, "doesn't the motive underneath a crime make a lot of difference? Don't you see, it's just because it isn't the truth—because grandfather is old—and Mrs. Gilchrist can't sing—and Marjorie Bentley is a hopeless stick, that it means just that much the more to be told the opposite? If that's lying—and that's what you're trying to tell me, isn't it," she challenged him bravely—"it seems to me it's worth it, to buy such innocent happiness for people one loves."

"All the same, through rose colored glasses one can't see truly—and that's the biggest thing in life—to see true," Ted reiterated doggedly. "Truth's a darned hard taskmistress, you know—won't stand any fooling with," he dropped suddenly back into the old chaffing tone; "whether we hand out bouquets to gladden praise starved hearts, or whether we know that Rutherford loves us best with our rose colored spectacles on, and we enjoy above all things having Rutherford on its knees."

"O, choked Shirley, too outraged for speech.

"Better take 'em off, Shirley, before you get permanent rose colored astigmatism," was Ted's final lash. "If you'd just step off for a minute from that pedestal Rutherford's hoister you up on to, and take off that halo they've jammed on to your head, you'd see what I mean."

Opportunely at that moment Shirley could cross the room and bend over the music rack to hide the tears she could no longer keep back. Perhaps Ted surmised them, for later he apologized with a disarming boyish penitence.

"I keep forgetting that you are a little over ten and nearly Mrs. Elliot Monroe," he told her with a smile which usually won forgiveness for his most ruthless frankness. He ruined all chance of pardon, however, by adding, "And even I am bound to confess the halo is becoming."

STORY OF LOVE AND MYSTERY

the Fearings

In the solitude of her own room Shirley at first wept bitterly, like a heartbroken child under its first blow. Later anger effectually dried her eyes. Why should she waste a single tear on anything Ted McAlister might say when a man like Elliot Monroe thought her perfection! The best punishment she could give Ted was to forget his words completely, she decided, as she settled herself for sleep. After tonight she would arrange matters so she should never have to talk to him again.

In that, however, she was reckoning without James Cassidy, Esquire. It was shortly after three o'clock that same night when Shirley first made his acquaintance. She had wakened with a vague sense of disaster to a terrifying realization that a sinister figure was bending over her dressing table, the lower part of its face muffled to a black blur, its hands closing greedily over the Wayne pearls grandfather had given her her last birthday.

"If you ever see a burglar?" grandfather had answered once an anxious inquiry of hers on this subject, "keep your eyes closed, don't make a sound, and let him take anything he wants."

With the dreaded emergency actually at hand, however, Shirley for all her forethought found herself unable to apply the first aid she had been recommended. Her soft voice discovered suddenly unexpected resources and lifted itself in a shriek which would have done credit to a New York huckster.

The unwelcomed visitor, clutching the pearls, took a threatening step towards the bed. But he had made a fatal miscalculation in regard to opposing forces. "An old man, an old woman, and a girl in that part of the house," he had summed them up contemptuously. Age, however, though it had whitened grandfather's hair and weakened his knee joints, had been as yet wholly unable to make any inroads upon his impetuous courage. Not for nothing had he been dubbed in youth "Daredevil Wayne." Barefooted, in the nightshirt of a generation ago, oblivious of his eighty years, the old colonel hurled himself into the room in instant answer to that beloved cry. The intruder was waiting for him behind a leveled revolver, but grandfather had never yet stopped in the middle of a charge. Grandmother was screaming for help quaveringly from her window; Shirley, rigid against her pillow, could only watch, paralyzed with horror, as he plunged towards that round, menacing eye marking his heart. The enemy, flinging up his hand, played his last desperate card and fired into the air; then grandfather was upon him, fighting with all the strength of love. But even that could not prevail against a handicap of fifty years; a moment later the old figure lay still upon the floor, and the burglar, vaulting to the piazza, swung himself down victoriously into the waiting arms of the excited neighbors below.

Crest Hill, the inner stronghold of aristocratic Rutherford, awoke the next morning amazedly to find itself notorious. Much as it disapproved in theory of the limelight resting upon its exclusive precincts, it was humanly frail enough to enjoy the unwonted excitement. Even Shirley found the aftermath of a burglary quite agreeable as she related dramatically to an absorbed audience the events of the night before. Honorably, she made grandfather and grandmother the hero and heroine of the episode; there was nothing Shirley liked better than, secure on her own pedestal, to fling down roses upon her adorers below.

"It wasn't just grandfather's daring to wrestle with the creature that way," she explained proudly, "but his going ahead right in the face of that loaded revolver—pointed straight at his heart—flinging himself on it—absolutely emptyhanded."

"Acted like a damned fool," grandfather, his head picturesquely bandaged, admitted shamefacedly. "Got entirely too skittish for my years. Jiu-jitsu is no sport for the aged. The truth is, I saw red when I thought that scoundrel was hurting Shirley. I don't remember another thing that happened until I felt my venerable bones strike the floor."

If the dining room had furnished thrills, they dwindled to ciphers beside those provided by the courtroom. Shirley had been awaiting her appearance in the witness stand with a mingling of anticipation and dread. She enjoyed drama of any description, and she had a delightful new gown and hat for the occasion; on the other hand, in stories and plays witnesses seemed always to be having a rather hard time of it.

"Will they heckle me?" she inquired fearfully of grandfather and Elliot, as they waited with her in the somber hall of the courthouse her summons to the trial. "In stories they are always heckling the witnesses—being impolite to them and objecting to everything they say. Will they treat me like that?"

Grandfather and Elliot exchanged the look she always particularly enjoyed—as older people smile in secret over the head of a beloved child.

"I don't believe any one is going to heckle you," Elliot remarked with eloquent significance. "And I'm sure no one will object to you."

It was quite evident from the beginning of Shirley's testimony that nobody did. This knowledge alleviated the shock of her first introduction to the mysterious workings of the law. She had visioned a great, dignified room; an impressive, black robed, white wigged judge; on one side the prisoner trembling in his dock, and on the other herself—in the new gown and hat—a solitary, graceful figure facing a sea of expectant faces.

One by one these interesting details were rudely washed out of her picture. The courtroom itself was dingy beyond belief: Shirley's horrified gaze took instant note of the paint peeling from the railings; of the large stain in the ceiling; of the cracked water pitcher in the corner. The judge, baldheaded and in a gray business suit, lounged negligently at a shabby desk; the prisoner, wholly casual and unconcerned, was comfortably seated beside his attorney; there was no dock, and witnesses, it seemed, paradoxically sat in the witness stand—wedged in at that between a stoop-shouldered old man writing busilpy in a book and twelve singularly unprepossessing looking individuals who fixed upon her a weary, lack luster gaze. The last glimmer of romance departed when, instead of kissing reverently the Bible, she was ordered by a bored young man to hold up her right hand and "to tell-the-truth-the-whole-truth-and-nothin'-but-the-truth-s'help-me-Gawd!"

It was all most disillusioning, but beyond the mutilated railings broke a foaming line of filmy dresses and lace parasols—Rutherford's Four Hundred defying the heat to hear Shirley testify. It might prove an interesting afternoon after all, Shirley decided, especially after she had noted that the vacant eyed jury, adamant, apparently, so far to golden hair and a Lichenstein hat, was rousing slowly from its apathy as she began to speak. Of all her many weapons, Shirley's voice had caused perhaps the greatest fatality. As she stated her name and residence a distinct masculine flutter agitated the courtroom. Only the prisoner and a certain gray coated, straight backed individual in the front row, gazing indifferently before him with his mouth set in a hard, uncompromising line, remained unaffected by it. Even the prosecuting attorney began disciplining a rampant cowlick.

"I am going to ask you, Miss Wayne, to tell us in your own words just what did happen that night," he suggested ingratiatingly.

So Shirley, in her soft, appealing voice, told them, simply and graphically. Grandfather had been able to give only a vague and confused account of proceedings; grandmother had not been in the room during the struggle; Shirley was the important witness for the prosecution. Unexpectedly, she made the scene live before a breathless audience, painting with tender, vivid strokes the gallant old figure which had rushed with such splendid impetuosity to her rescue. It was a masterly piece of evidence—so masterly that the prosecuting attorney left it to produce its own effect, and without a comment turned over his witness to the defense.

So far Shirley had quite enjoyed proceedings, with the exception of an unpleasant moment when she had had to identify the prisoner. She had not liked that, and had quite forgotten her audience as she turned her gentle, pitying gaze upon the impassive Cassidy. Her reluctance to send him to the fate he so evidently deserved, her sorrowful "Yes—I am sure that is the man," softened even the judge's eyes.

The lawyer for the defense rose slowly to his feet. He was a slender little man, with intelligent, singularly sad eyes set deep in a lined face. Shirley had heard of him from her grandfather. "Usually a shyster lawyer takes a case like this," the colonel had explained. "But Beresford is of different caliber. He's a gentleman and a sterling chap. His hobby is defending criminals who haven't money to pay for a good lawyer. They say he had a son who died in the penitentiary, and that is why he wants to help out these poor devils."

Shirley had liked him for that. She liked him still more when he addressed her in his pleasant, deferential voice. This nice man would never heckle anybody, she told herself in relief.

"I understood you to testify, Miss Wayne, did I not, that as Colonel Wayne entered your room the defendant leveled a pistol at him?"

"Yes," Shirley answered.

"That your grandfather rushed upon the defendant and struggled with him; that during this struggle he knocked up the defendant's hand so that the pistol was discharged in the air?"

"Yes," Shirley repeated. How fussy they were in law about unimportant things, she commented inwardly.

"Now, are you absolutely certain, Miss Wayne," Mr. Beresford asked her earnestly, "that that shot was fired after your grandfather flung himself upon the defendant? Wasn't it rather the defendant himself who, just before Colonel Wayne grappled with him, fired into the air of his own free will—merely to frighten away his assailant?"

With his words rushed into Shirley's mind a gripping memory of the immense relief of that unforgettable moment when the terrifying wrist leveled at grandfather's heart had flung itself up in sudden merciful reprieve. Barring forever the entrance of her testimony stood inexorably the story she had retold so many times these last weeks. If that in itself were not enough, in the front row of spectators sat Ted McAlister, meeting her eyes at this crucial moment with that same hard, mocking challenge he had sent her across a church aisle one Sunday centuries ago.

It seemed to Shirley that it lasted hours—that swift, unexpected struggle in which conscience and vanity were suddenly locked. Even the trained ear of the lawyer, however, was unable to detect any faintest hesitation in her steady answer.

"No. It was grandfather who knocked up the pistol into the air."

The rest of the afternoon was a vague blur to Shirley. Detached fragments of the trial forced themselves from time to time upon her attention: the ripple of laughter the chauffeur's broken English brought forth; Mr. Beresford's earnest voice still valiantly pleading Cassidy's innocence of any intent to kill: "Gentlemen of the jury, I ask you, if the defendant had had any desire to shoot Colonel Wayne, what better opportunity could he have possibly wished than that given when the colonel stood defenseless in the doorway? Yet he did not shoot then——"

But even proofs would have had to put up a hard fight against the state's witnesses, reinforced as they were by the colonel's heroism, by grandmother's sweetness, by Shirley's charm. It was, in the prosecuting attorney's opinion, a highly satisfactory afternoon.

Shirley and James Cassidy did not altogether share in this opinion.

"Law is funny, I think," she remarked with careful casualness when she got home. "What earthly sense was there in that lawyer's harping on the exact moment that old pistol was fired? What possible difference could that make?"

"Just a difference of seventeen more years in the pen for J. Cassidy," Charlie Travers had assured her blithely. "He'd have drawn only two or three years for just a plain common or garden burglary; that playful little attempt to kill cost him a mere seventeen more."

Grandfather and Elliot later expressed their sentiments freely in regard to this statement. "Don't you know that a girl as sensitive as Shirley would be bound to take a thing like that to heart—that it would worry her terribly?" grandfather had stormed to the crestfallen Travers.

THERE was no doubt that something was worrying Shirley. Her laugh lost its joyousness; the sonnet inspiring eyes grew haunted as well as haunting. Grandfather and Elliot, ferventing cursing Charlie Travers, held anxious consultations about her health. Grandmother's opinion was that she was upset by her approaching marriage. Girls were often like that—no matter how much in love they might be. She tried several times with delicate, old fashioned circumlocution to reassure the child.

But Shirley unburdened herself to no one. Through those long watches of the night with which she was becoming so despairingly familiar she planned confession after confession, only to come back always to the same thought. It was impossible; she couldn't strike home like that to grandfather, to grandmother, to Elliot, to all these people who loved her so deeply and believed in her so utterly. Better a thousand times that Cassidy should be sacrificed than they. It was silly to suffer so over a bad man who deserved his fate. The motive behind her lie had been wholly innocent. She had only wanted to give grandfather pleasure—to make him feel a hero despite that birthday he had dreaded. It wasn't as if she herself had gained anything by her deception. She would argue out her case convincingly, persuade herself she had rolled away for good that hideous weight of oppression—and then there it was again with each heavy eyed dawn, crushing her, killing her, wiping every jot of sunshine out of her world. Even the adulation she had lived upon had turned to bitterest gall. She moved about restlessly now upon the pedestal she had so enjoyed, measuring its distance from the ground with sick, terrified glances. And when she prayed at church no thought of possible admiring glances came between her and the hopeless, anguished petitions with which she was bombarding heaven these days:

"O God, the Father of Heaven, have mercy upon us miserable sinners!"

"What would you do if you should find out I wasn't this perfect creature you think I am," she asked Elliot one day when he had been telling her for the hundredth time what she stood for in his life; "that I had done something you thought wrong—really wicked?"

"What's the use of discussing an impossibility?" he demanded.

"O, Elliot, don't be silly!" she flashed back with an irritability incredible in Shirley. "I'm human—of course I could make mistakes."

It seemed to her that she must scream if Elliot just once more fatuously reiterated her flawlessness. He saved her by this time seriously pondering her question.

"If I lost my faith in you, Shirley," he answered her gravely, "I should—well, there wouldn't be anything left for me. I should lose faith in God and man!"

"That setled it," she told herself with finality as she began that night the old desperate searching for sleep. She couldn't tell him—ever!

That, however, was before her visit to the jail.

She had awakened one night with a heaven sent inspiration. If she could not right Cassidy's wrong, she could at least make atonement to his fellow sufferers. She would devote her life, she vowed in the darkness, to helping criminals. Every moment of leisure—every cent she could save from her allowance.

It seemed a completely feasible scheme until daylight came with its brutally practical tests. Then she began to lose heart a little. But she would not let escape without a struggle this one hope of comfort. As soon as breakfast was over she paid an early morning call on Jessica Saunders.

Jessica, energetic and plain, a dead weight in society, was deep in social work. The debutantes regarded her as a hopeless highbrow and—still worse—a noble soul. Shirley alone had gone out of her way at teas where Jessica was still occasionally stranded to speak a friendly word to her, and had even tried to share with her at dances reluctant partners.

It was bread cast upon the waters. Jessica, all eagerness and interest, listened now to Shirley's pretty plea of weariness at nothing but good times—of desire for service.

"Couldn't I help people in prison?" Shirley asked. "Ever since we had that burglary, I keep thinking perhaps if that poor man had just had a chance—isn't there something one can do to help men like him?"

There was much, it seemed, and in an evil hour for Shirley, Jessica promised to let her know the next time she took magazines to the jail.

THE day after that visit Shirley confessed to Elliot. They had ridden far out of town into a little green and gold wood they claimed especially for their own. It had known their happiest hours. Shirley would never have believed that in that setting, with her lover stretched at her feet, looking up at her with adoring eyes, life could seem utterly hateful and awry. Not even this golden moment, it appeared, could wipe out those searing memories of hard, miserable faces behind inexorable bars; of a boy prone on a dirty cot, his head buried in his arms; of that sordid, unspeakably desolate little world shut out from sun and wind and sky. A great sob shook her unexpectedly, startling Elliot to his feet.

"Why, Shirley," he besought her anxiously, "what is it? What is it, my darling?"

She tried brokenly at first to shelter herself behind a headache and nerves and; then suddenly, to her own amazement, found herself pouring out the bare, unpardonable truth.

To Elliot it was totally unpardonable; that was evident from the first. Perhaps if Shirley had sobbed it out against his shoulder he might have been able to find some mitigating circumstances. But the long months of hidden struggle had worn her out, and she discovered all at once she was at the last lap of her strength, able only to relate unemotionally naked facts, facing Elliot's incredulous horror with expressionless eyes and voice.

Nothing that she had pictured of confession in her blackest nights surpassed the terrible reality. She had to turn the knife again and again in her open wound as she forced Elliot to accept the fact that she was neither joking nor delirious; it was even harder after his desperate "I can't believe it—I can't believe it," had changed to a bewildered "But why—in God's name, why did you do it, Shirley?"

She had asked herself that same question a thousand times the last months. Now in her despairing groping to make him understand, she found for herself the answer.

"I suppose it was because I had tampered so many times with the truth," she told him. "She's a hard task mistress; won't stand fooling with"—unwittingly she had caught at Ted's words—"and so—when the big test came—I failed."

But try as she would, she could not make Elliot understand the psychology of the weakness Ted had divined so clearly. As exaggeratedly as he had viewed formerly her virtues, he now judged her offense. Shirley, too proud to urge her motive, her ignorance of the law, her remorse, waited in silence his verdict. With feminine intuition she knew she had only—even now—to fling herself into his arms, to sob out an appeal for forgiveness, to soften its asperity. Something stronger and finer than stubbornness held her back. Now at last—at the end—she would play the game squarely—take her medicine like the soldier grandfather had tried to teach her to be. Something, too, in her feeling for Elliot had died during that cruel half hour. She was not sure yet just what it was, but until she knew she did not want the old relationship back.

"What am I to do?" she asked him at last, breaking a dreadful silence.

"It's too late to do anything now," he answered with bitter reproach.

"I could tell," she said briefly.

This had been, in her secret rehearsals of confession, what she had most dreaded he would suggest, had determined she would fight with all the force of her charm and loveliness. Now, incredibly, it was she who was sponsoring the motion, Elliot of the stern integrity who was vehemently vetoing it.

"You couldn't hurt your grandfather and grandmother like that," he asserted flatly. He did not add "and me," but if he had shouted the words, they could not have echoed more loudly. "Besides, the man isn't worth it. You heard his record at the trial. He's better in prison than out. He's not the one I'm worrying about—it's you—to think you could have done such a thing!"

"Bad or not, he has seventeen undeserved years in prison if I don't tell," she continued with this strange new composure which had come to her. "I have to face that."

"It's too late to face it now," he told her with finality.

"What would they do to me if I did tell?" she still persisted.

"Perjury is merely a penitentiary offense," he informed her darkly. "At the least you'd have to go before the pardon board in Albany. There are five men in that; it's not in human nature they'd all keep quiet. It would be all over the state—mean ruin for you—absolute social ostracism. It would kill your grandparents; I suppose I could stand it."

"You wouldn't have to," she told him, sudden fire in her calm. "You don't suppose Id let our engagement continue—in the face of that?"

"You don't suppose I'd let you break it—in the face of that?" he returned. "Have everybody saying I'd thrown you over when you most needed me? That would be the last straw!"

She did not try to argue the matter with him. They rode home in tense silence. Shirley glanced sorrowfully from time to time at the handsome profile, haggard against the crimsoning sky, with an ache in her heart for his suffering. But it was an impersonal sort of heartache—quite different from the one she had expected to feel. Everything was different, it seemed—she herself most amazingly so of all in a reeling universe. Despite its chaos, two astounding facts stood out with vivid clearness: she had never loved Elliot, and she must tell.

The moment she got home she packed carefully his ring and the costly trifles he had given her, and, with a good deal of effort, wrote him a few lines:

"You surely can't think I can let our engagement go on—after this afternoon. We cannot let what people might think affect us in so serious a matter as this. You need not feel—no matter what comes to me—that the community will blame you in any way. I shall make clear to our friends how generous and chivalrous you tried to be.

"And please don't lose faith in other people, dear Elliot, because I have failed you. That would hurt me most of all. Some day you will find a girl who really is what you thought I was.

"With every good wish for your happiness,

"SHIRLEY WAYNE."

SHE sat a moment holding the box which contained what had once symbolized all her hopes. Packed away in it were romance and girlish dreams, she realized with this startling new clearness of vision—but not love. She and Elliot had never loved each other; he had adored the perfect creature he thought she was—she had adored his adoration. This new Shirley, born of travail of the soul, he viewed with hostile eyes; this new Elliot, harsh and uncomprehending, she shrank from, repelled.

After she had written her letter she forced herself to go to bed. She needed all her strength for the next day.

She was up at dawn, dressing herself noiselessly in whatever came first at hand. She slipped a little note under grandfather's door, explaining she was making an early start for an all day motor trip—and stood a moment, eyes wet with tears, visioning the dear sleeping figure within. Grandfather was not like Elliot—he would understand. He would want her to do as she was doing, would stand by her shoulder to shoulder through whatever might come to her, hiding his own hurt to ease hers. All that she could do to save him this she would; but if she failed—if he must know—she had no fear he would not understand. Truth—that was the great thing to grandfather, as it was to Ted. He would think no price too great to pay for it.

"In Albany," Elliot had said. She did not know what a pardon board was, but she had no fear but that she would find it and that it would be in session. With an irresistible force like this driving one on, failure could not lie ahead.

The gray roadster ate up greedily mile after mile that lay between her and reparation. She stopped for a few moments at Haverhill to swallow a cup of coffee and to telephone to Albany. Yes, they told her at the capitol—as she was sure they would—the pardon board was meeting this Saturday. It would be open till five.

It was four when she flung herself out of her car at the capitol steps. She did not wait to go up to the hotel to make herself presentable; no thought this time of gown and hat for a to be charmed audience. She ran instead hastily up the wide steps, interrogated a uniformed official, and a few moments later found herself, her heart beating suffocatingly, in the ante-room of the pardon board.

"No hope of seeing any one today," the surly old fellow with the wooden leg standing guard at her Eden informed her. "Couldn't get in anyway without a special appointment."

But the famous Wayne charm, reinforced with a large tip, was irresistible. A few moments later the chairman of the board was reading the penciled message Shirley had scribbled.

"Must see you this afternoon on a matter of deepest importance. It is to rectify a great wrong. SHIRLEY WAYNE."

Within half an hour she stood before a tribunal which suddenly cooled her ardor and froze the words on her eager tongue. It was not the stately room, hung with portraits of famous judges, nor the impressive half circle grouped about a mahogany table which daunted her; it was the fact that she found herself looking across that table straight into the steady eyes of Ted McAlister—the one man, next to grandfather, whom she most dreaded to have know the truth.

For a moment she wavered, veering panic-stricken from that new goal of uncompromising truth she had set before her, searching a means of escape, even at this eleventh hour. But only for a moment. Then she had herself in hand again, and, shoulders squared, head high, plunged resolutely into the story she had gone over to herself a hundred times that day.

"I am Shirley Wayne—Colonel Roger Wayne's granddaughter. Four months ago in the courtroom at Springfield I testified falsely. It was during the trial of a burglar who had broken into our house. I said he fired his pistol while he and grandfather were struggling together and that grandfather knocked his hand up so that the shot went into the air. But that isn't so. What really happened is that he fired first into the air—to scare away grandfather—and then grandfather grappled with him. I didn't realize what a difference that would make in law—I was just trying to make as much of a hero as I could out of grandfather. He was eighty years old the day before, and I wanted to cheer him up. But of course that isn't any excuse. It wasn't the truth, and it has meant seventeen years more in the penitentiary for that burglar. That is the reason I have to tell you. He mustn't serve that—it isn't fair. If there is any way you can keep him from it—without letting my grandfather and grandmother know," for the first time her voice faltered, "I wish you would. It is going to be awfully hard on them. I don't care how you punish me, but if you could just keep it from them—they are very old."

She stopped. Suddenly the room had grown dark. She steadied herself desperately against the table. She would not faint—she would not. This one thing at least in her life she would see gallantly through. Slowly the room took shape again; the chairman was speaking in a grave, troubled voice, something about deliberating and calling her again. Then she was out once more in the anteroom. She had to rest a moment to get strength to go on, and outside there was a long, maddening wait for her car. All the little strength that was left in her had concentrated on a frenzied desire to escape seeing Ted McAlister. But even that boon was denied her; she was evidently to drain the last drop in her cup of penance. Before she could start her engine he was running down the steps and had vaulted uninvited into the seat beside her.

"This is providential for me," he assured her casually, as if nothing at all had happened. "Do you mind running me home? My car got in a smashup yesterday, and is in the shop. I was so afraid you would get off before I could break away. I had to fix that reporter there, and there is just one of those men—Madison—who has a streak of yellow in him and who might blab about this afternoon. I wanted to be sure he understood if he did he would settle with me. I think it is safe now; no one will ever know anything about it. I've got a bit of a pull with the governor, and I believe you will find he will pardon Cassidy at the end of the two years he ought anyway to serve. Don't worry any more about it, Shirley. No one—grandfather—grandmother—Elliot—is ever going to know anything about it—and you saved Cassidy."

"Elliot already knows," she said briefly. "I told him."

"You did, did you?" Ted commented in a curious voice.

Out of the vast weariness which was suddenly enveloping her, Shirley tried to find words to thank him for his thoughtfulness. All her resentment against him had mysteriously vanished. She might have known Ted would be kind. She remembered irrelevantly the look on his face the day his dog had died; he had sat up for two nights nursing it. With a sudden generous impulse she broke the silence which had fallen between them.

"You were right—absolutely right in what you told me that evening. I see it now. Do you remember what you said—if I'd come down off my pedestal I'd understand? Well, I'm off it," she flung out her hands in a sad little gesture, "down in the dust. And I understand."

"Off it," he repeated in a queer, choked voice wholly unlike Ted's. "Off it! When you are up on it so high—so high—a man has to go down on his knees to worship you.

"I swore I'd never tell you," he went on rapidly as she sat too dumbfounded for speech, "and I know, of course, it is no use; you're going to marry Elliot, and you hate me. But I want you, anyway to know. I love you, Shirley—have loved you all winter. I've fought it with everything that was in me, because—much as I wanted you—I despised you. I thought there wasn't anything to you, and I hated myself for losing my head over just your beauty. When I married I wanted a real woman—like my mother. That's why I was so bitter that night—I was so furious with myself for caring for you. But now—now——" His voice shook, and Shirley's heart began pounding suddenly in a way Elliot's most eloquent moments had never achieved. "The pluck of you—the magnificent courage! You're your grandfather's girl after all. Shirley—if you knew what it means to a man to be able to look up—high—to the woman he loves."

The debutantes had been all wrong, it seemed. He could be a wonderful lover.

IF any one had ever mentioned to Jim Cassidy that he had been instrumental in rescuing a soul from spiritual smugness and in bringing about one of those few matches which are planned in heaven, his remarks would undoubtedly be unprintable. Nevertheless, when any romance seeking acquaintance asks Ted and Shirley how they first met, they invariably reply, "It was a burglar who first really introduced us!"

AND now along comes Kathleen Norris' new book, "The Callahans and the Murphys" (Doubleday, Page), which is not about Jewish life in America. Mrs. Norris, one of the most entertaining of our fiction writers, belongs to the Fannie Hurst school of realism, but in these stories she knows her people more truly than ever Dr. Dreiser knew his. The Callahans and the Murphys belong to that stratum of American society which asserts emphasis by proclaiming, "I'll tell the world!" And if the knights and ladyes of the Ku Klux Klan do not have it suppressed the book should do well.

John T. McCutcheon.

The distinguished looking gentleman on the right is not Irvin S. Cobb, author of "Cobb's America Guyed Books," but John T. McCutcheon, a promising young artist who made the pictures for this six volume edition of travelogues which the Doran company publishes. We have in this country no humorist who has, year in and year out, evoked more laughs than Prof. Cobb; and if the laughs have been for the most part abdominal rather than cerebral, who are we to complain? We are lucky to be able to laugh at all. Think of the Germans: what have they to laugh about—unless they laugh at us! But Prof. Cobb, having laughed his way through Europe, now surveys these United States, or, six of them, at least, and many a raucous guffaw may be derived from his observations. Who knows but in time Prof. Cobb may take to the road with a series of travel lectures—"See America Thirst," or something of the sort—and, with the aid of Mr. Hepner and a booking agent, rival Burton Holmes? The "Guyed Books," however, have been seriously accepted in Europe, and created such a profound impression that the Bulgarian government recently conferred upon author and illustrator the Cross of St. Jude the Obscure, second class.

Richard Hovey, Dartmouth, '85, was a Psi U, but in spite of that he was a gifted poet. He belonged to a bigger and better age when college youths piled logs on the fire, lifted flowing bowls, and flung song upon the night. Nowadays college youths turn on the radiator, telephone a bootlegger, and perhaps whistle a little. Eheu! Fugaces. When we, a sad number of years ago, were treading the campus paths of Dartmouth, we often used to wander into College hall to gaze upon a dim portrait of Richard Hovey, who strongly resembled Francois Villon, and was, we believe, the originator of the flannel shirt vogue among collegians. But he wrote the finest college lyrics that ever were sung, and Small, Maynard & Co. have gathered the best of them into a book, "Dartmouth Lyrics."

And on the subject of colleges and college literature, Miss Butcher was right as usual the other Saturday when she uttered a cheerful forecast that Edwin Balmer's new novel, "Fidelia," would soon rank among the best sellers. Within our experience no serious novel of college life has achieved such favorable reviews from faculty men and others connected with a university as has been accorded "Fidelia." Yet only half the book deals with college—the other half concerns itself with marriage; and while we cannot speak from first hand knowledge, because we were scarcely ever at Northwestern and almost never married, yet we enjoyed "Fidelia" very much, indeed. It deserves the large sale it is having.

Cosmo Hamilton.

A few years ago there was a war in Europe, and when it was over Philip Gibbs wrote a remarkable book called "Now It Can Be Told." Philip Gibbs' brother, Sir Cosmo Hamilton, has just written a similar book about himself. Not quite so remarkable, perhaps, but it tells a great deal more. Sir Cosmo is the author of an imposing array of novels and plays, among them "The Blindness of Virtue," "Scandal," et al., and bears the distinction of being the best dressed playwright who ever acknowledged the plaudits of a first night audience—with the possible exception of Sam Shipman. It would be unkind to call this volume of Sir Cosmo's reminiscences "Myself and a Couple of Others," for, although the pronoun "I" is not infrequent, still there are dozens of other famous persons mentioned—in fact, everybody connected with the stage except George, the doorman at the Cort theater. The actual title of the book is "Unwritten History" (Little, Brown), and it is one of the most engaging works of the kind we have ever read.

Last spring there came a novel with a new name to it. "Sweet Pepper" was the novel, and Geoffrey Moss was the new name. This spring Boni & Liveright have brought out "Defeat," by the same author, and it is one of the best things of the season. Major Moss, whom we suspect of gracing some sort of British diplomatic post in the occupied territory, writes stories of people in the suffering Ruhr, and in hungry Berlin, and writes so well that you wish there were sixteen stories in the book, instead of six. The style is so straight and keen edged and simple that much of it reads like a translation; there is sharp drama in every one of the stories, and a splendid sympathy for a bruised and battered people.

Modern Arabian Nights

by Rosita Forbes

3—A Desert Night's Surprises

"WALLAHI, it should be here!" exclaimed Jusuf for the twentieth time. "I tell you it is useless to go farther. Did not the Sheik say his guides would meet us while the desert was still flat as the bread a woman makes without yeast?"

The speaker raised himself clumsily in stirrups shaped like coal shovels. He was a townsman, a member of the Emir's household, sent with me as a witness of his prince's protection. "Allah save us, we have lost the way, and if we enter the territory of the Ait Amra without their Sheik's guides to speak for us, we shall make no further journeyings on earth."

The fat man looked around apprehensively as if he expected enemies to rise out of the earth. His purple robe was caked with the dust of a long day's travel and his kufiya torn and stained with sweat. "Did I not tell you traveling was not fit pursuit for the noble?" he repeated with the querulous impatience of a child.

I had heard this reproach so often since we left the capital of the Emir five days ago that I only looked at my compass reflectively. Since the dawn we had ridden southeast across a rolling desert, where gazelle tempted our rifles and the wind was scented with sage brush. Unless I had seriously miscalculated, this was the place where the Ait Amra guides should have met us. Anxiously I stared ahead to some sand dunes gilded by the sunset.

Jusuf's eyes were glued to my compass.

"It is that thing of magic which has destroyed us," he said.

The Bedouin guards drew nearer to look at the needle which so loved the north star. The tallest of them, Ahmed, who had sworn blood brotherhood with me, learned wearily on his rifle.

"We shall find a camping place in the dunes," he said, "and in the morning the guides of Ait Amra will come to us. Let us hasten or the night will catch us."

The baggage camels, which had collapsed with the suddenness of folding chairs, were prodded to their feet. With grunts from the animals and sighs from Jusuf, the little procession moved onward.

As we neared the dunes the half dozen armed Bedouins unslung their rifles and spread to right and left of the riders. To encourage their vigilance, I drew a revolver from the sash of my scarlet native dress, but we were hideously at the mercy of attack. As the ridges closed round us in the dusk I realized that any crest might hide a line of snipers, and cursed my folly in leaving the open plains.

It came with appalling suddenness—the thing for which, unconsciously, I had been waiting. A single shot broke the velvet stillness through which crept softly our small caravan. Something whined past my ear, stirring my veil. Instantly a line of fire lit the ridge on either side of us.

"Trapped!"

A camel groaned and fell to his knees. The Bedouins threw themselves flat on the sand, firing at an invisible enemy. For a second the blood beat in my head and I turned my frightened stallion at the rise. A figure sprang up almost under my hoofs and I laughed as my bullet caught it in the throat. One of my own men was writhing on the ground. Another lay so huddled that I knew he was dead. I could have shouted and screamed the fury that I felt, but my heavy draperies impeded my movements and, as I struggled with them, it seemed that a bee stung my cheek. Something warm and wet trickled down my throat.

Then a dark figure caught my rein and, in the shadow, I hardly knew whether it was friend or enemy.

"Ride, lady, there is no hope to fight," cried the voice of Ahmed. He pointed to a flying figure which already neared the safety of the plain. It was Jusuf, his stirrups swinging, his robe like a dark sail against the sunset. I looked up and saw the tribesmen silhouetted recklessly above us. My brain cooled and I started firing steadily.

"There is no danger," I told Ahmed between set teeth. "My life is protected."

For a few seconds there was a duel between rifle and revolver. Then two of the dark blotches disappeared and, with a scream, my stallion reared. Before I could recover my balance the animal had bolted and, in this undignified manner, I led a retreat which undoubtedly saved the situation. A man caught at my stirrup as I passed. It was the wounded Bedouin. I bent down to drag him to the saddle, but he was too heavy. My stallion plunged his way free, and in vain I wrenched at the bit.

IT is not etiquette in the desert to pursue a foe, so, by the time the merciful dusk closed round us we were free of the open plain and could count our losses. We had left two dead among the dunes, but the wounded man had been rescued. There was a wild outcry at the thought of the bodies which would by now be headless.

"We must return to fetch what is ours," exclaimed Ahmed, and, in another minute, with the battle cry of their people on their lips, the men would have doubled back towards Ait Amra. With blood to revenge, there would have been murder among the dunes!

I flung back my veil and shouted to them. For once the eloquence which is the Arab heritage seemed to be with me, and the tribesmen stared at me, drunk with the spell of words, which is more potent to them than wine.

The night wind brought us to our senses and, dejectedly, we turned backwards to some ruined huts we had passed in the late afternoon. Jusuf had already reached them and we found him, speechless with indignation, in possession of the cleanest corner. His dignity had been affronted and he could think of nothing but a vengeance which I guessed would be by proxy. Ahmed evidently had the same idea.

"The hand of a townsman is too soft for the rifle," he said, "but, by my head and my eyes, I swear I will have a life for each one of my brothers, and my wife shall not know me till this is done."

In silence we prepared for the night. The camel which had carried our stores lay dead across the borders of Ait Amra and we had nothing with us but a few dates and a strip or two of dried gazelle meat. Worse still, the goatskin which held the last of our precious water had been pierced by a bullet.

"It is empty as the breast of my grandmother," announced Ahmed tragically, but a Bedouin relieved our gloom my announcing that there was an old well a few yards from the huts. By this time it was pitch dark. We lowered the great gourd which served as a bucket into depths which seemed faintly phosphorescent, and brought it up satisfactorily full.

"By Allah, there is something in the well," remarked Ahmed, as the gourd stuck for a minute. "Heven grant it is not a Jinn."*

In darkness we divided our meager provisions and drank the vilest water I have ever tasted. In darkness I tore up my sash and bandaged the wounded man's shoulder. Then I crawled into a corner, rolled myself in a blanket, and went to sleep with my head pillowed on my arm. The death chants of the Bedouin haunted my dreams and I saw again the two crumpled figures among the dunes. My cheek was stiff and sore, so I woke vowing vengeance on the raiders, and slept no more because of a curious pain which increased as the stars rose higher. Gradually I was conscious of movement in the hut. Generally the Bedouins slept like statues, but now they flung themselves from side to side, punctuating their restlessness with groans.

The author in Bedouin dress.

"Wallahi, a snake eats my belly——" came a woeful voice which I failed to recognize, and it occurred to me that the description exactly fitted my own agony.

"Allah, the water was accursed!" said another Bedouin. "There was certainly a Jinn in the well."

Doubled up in my corner, I felt cold sweat on my forehead and I was just wondering what had been in the well when a soft, fat voice beside me remarked faintly, "It is finished! By Allah, I am going to die."

I knew the tones of Jusuf and he was the one man who simply could not be allowed to die, for his face was our only passport in a country which gives short shift to strangers.

"Allah forbid," I replied in a voice which I hoped sounded encouraging. "I have a powerful medicine which will cure you."

CONTORTED with pain, I crawled to the spot where I had left my holsters and, in pitch darkness, I began fumbling for the little bottle of brandy I reserved for such emergencies as these. Sighs drifted past me and I shivered a little, for it seemed as if the place were full of tormented spirits. My fingers shook as, after much futile searching, they closed round the precious flask. Slowly, because of the pangs which wrung me, I crept back to Jusuf, but he did not answer when I called his name.

In desperation I began feeling the huddled bodies, for when an Arab makes up his mind to die it takes strong measures to stop him. My hands struck against cartridge belt and sword, and I was sobbing in the darkness before I touched soft, yielding flesh and the weaponless girdle of the townsman.

"Jusuf, I have the medicine. It is very strong," I cried to him, but his pulse was almost gone and his head sagged inertly against my arm.

Ruthlessly I forced open his teeth and poured half the contents of the flask through them. There was a moment's silence. I could feel the shudder which ran through the limp body against my knees and I never knew whether it was tears or sweat that ran down my own face. "Bismillah," murmured a Bedouin, "the claws of the evil one are rending me."

Unconsciously my hand clutched my flesh as if it would hold it together in spite of the pain which wracked it. Then Jusuf spoke and his voice was unexpectedly strong.

"By Allah, that is good medicine," he said. "Have you more of it?"

I handed him the flask, heard him gulping the last precious drops, and was mildly amused at the thought of his horror if he knew that the medicine was the spirit forbidden by his prophet. Then I must have fainted for, when I was next conscious the sun was pouring into the hut, which was empty except for the fat silk clad figure of Jusuf, who was eating doura grains with relish. Outside, silhouetted against the desert, were a group of my Bedouins talking to three strangers who were evidently the dilatory guides of Ait Amra.

I stared dully at the pinched and haggard faces of my men, and decided they would certainly accept blood money for the kinsmen killed by Ait Amra. I never saw any one look less like fighting than Ahmed. The recalcitrant guides evidently realized it, for they redoubled their explanations and apologies. I heard repeated, "It was a mistake. Allah forgive us, but you were taken for an enemy," and then the magic word, "silver," which heals so many feuds in the east.

Stupefied with pain, my hand went out to the flask which glittered a few feet away. I stared without comprehension—that round painted thing had never contained brandy. With a gasp, I precipitated myself towards the bulging holsters whose contents had been scattered by my midnight search. There was the brandy flask intact, but I had no thought of thankfulness for the relief it promised. For a full minute I glared at the gaudy glass clenched in my stiff fingers. I remembered it now—the gift of a courteous merchant on the coast—but my brain refused to grasp what I had done.

Jusuf spoke, "Of a certainty that was great medicine, O, lady," he said cheerfully, "but by Allah it burned my throat and stomach!" I stared at him wildly, for I was slowly realizing that I had given him half a bottle of eau de cologne.

An hour later, when the question of blood money and the return of the decapitated heads had been arranged to the satisfaction of my still very sick followers, curiosity drove me to the well.

"The caravan is ready to start, lady," shouted Jusuf, but I wanted to understand the reason of the night's suffering. I called the word which, for centuries, has retarded the progress of the east—"Badein—presently!" and, a moment later, found myself looking down the well.

A curious odor assailed my nostrils. The water was shimmering with a pink, putrescent slime, and, from its midst, protruded the decaying legs of a dead—such a very dead—camel!

"The place is accursed, lady!" shouted Ahmed from a safe distance. "Come away quickly or the Jinn will seize you."

"It is certainly accursed," I retorted feebly, and had just time to reach the nearest bushes before I was violently sick.

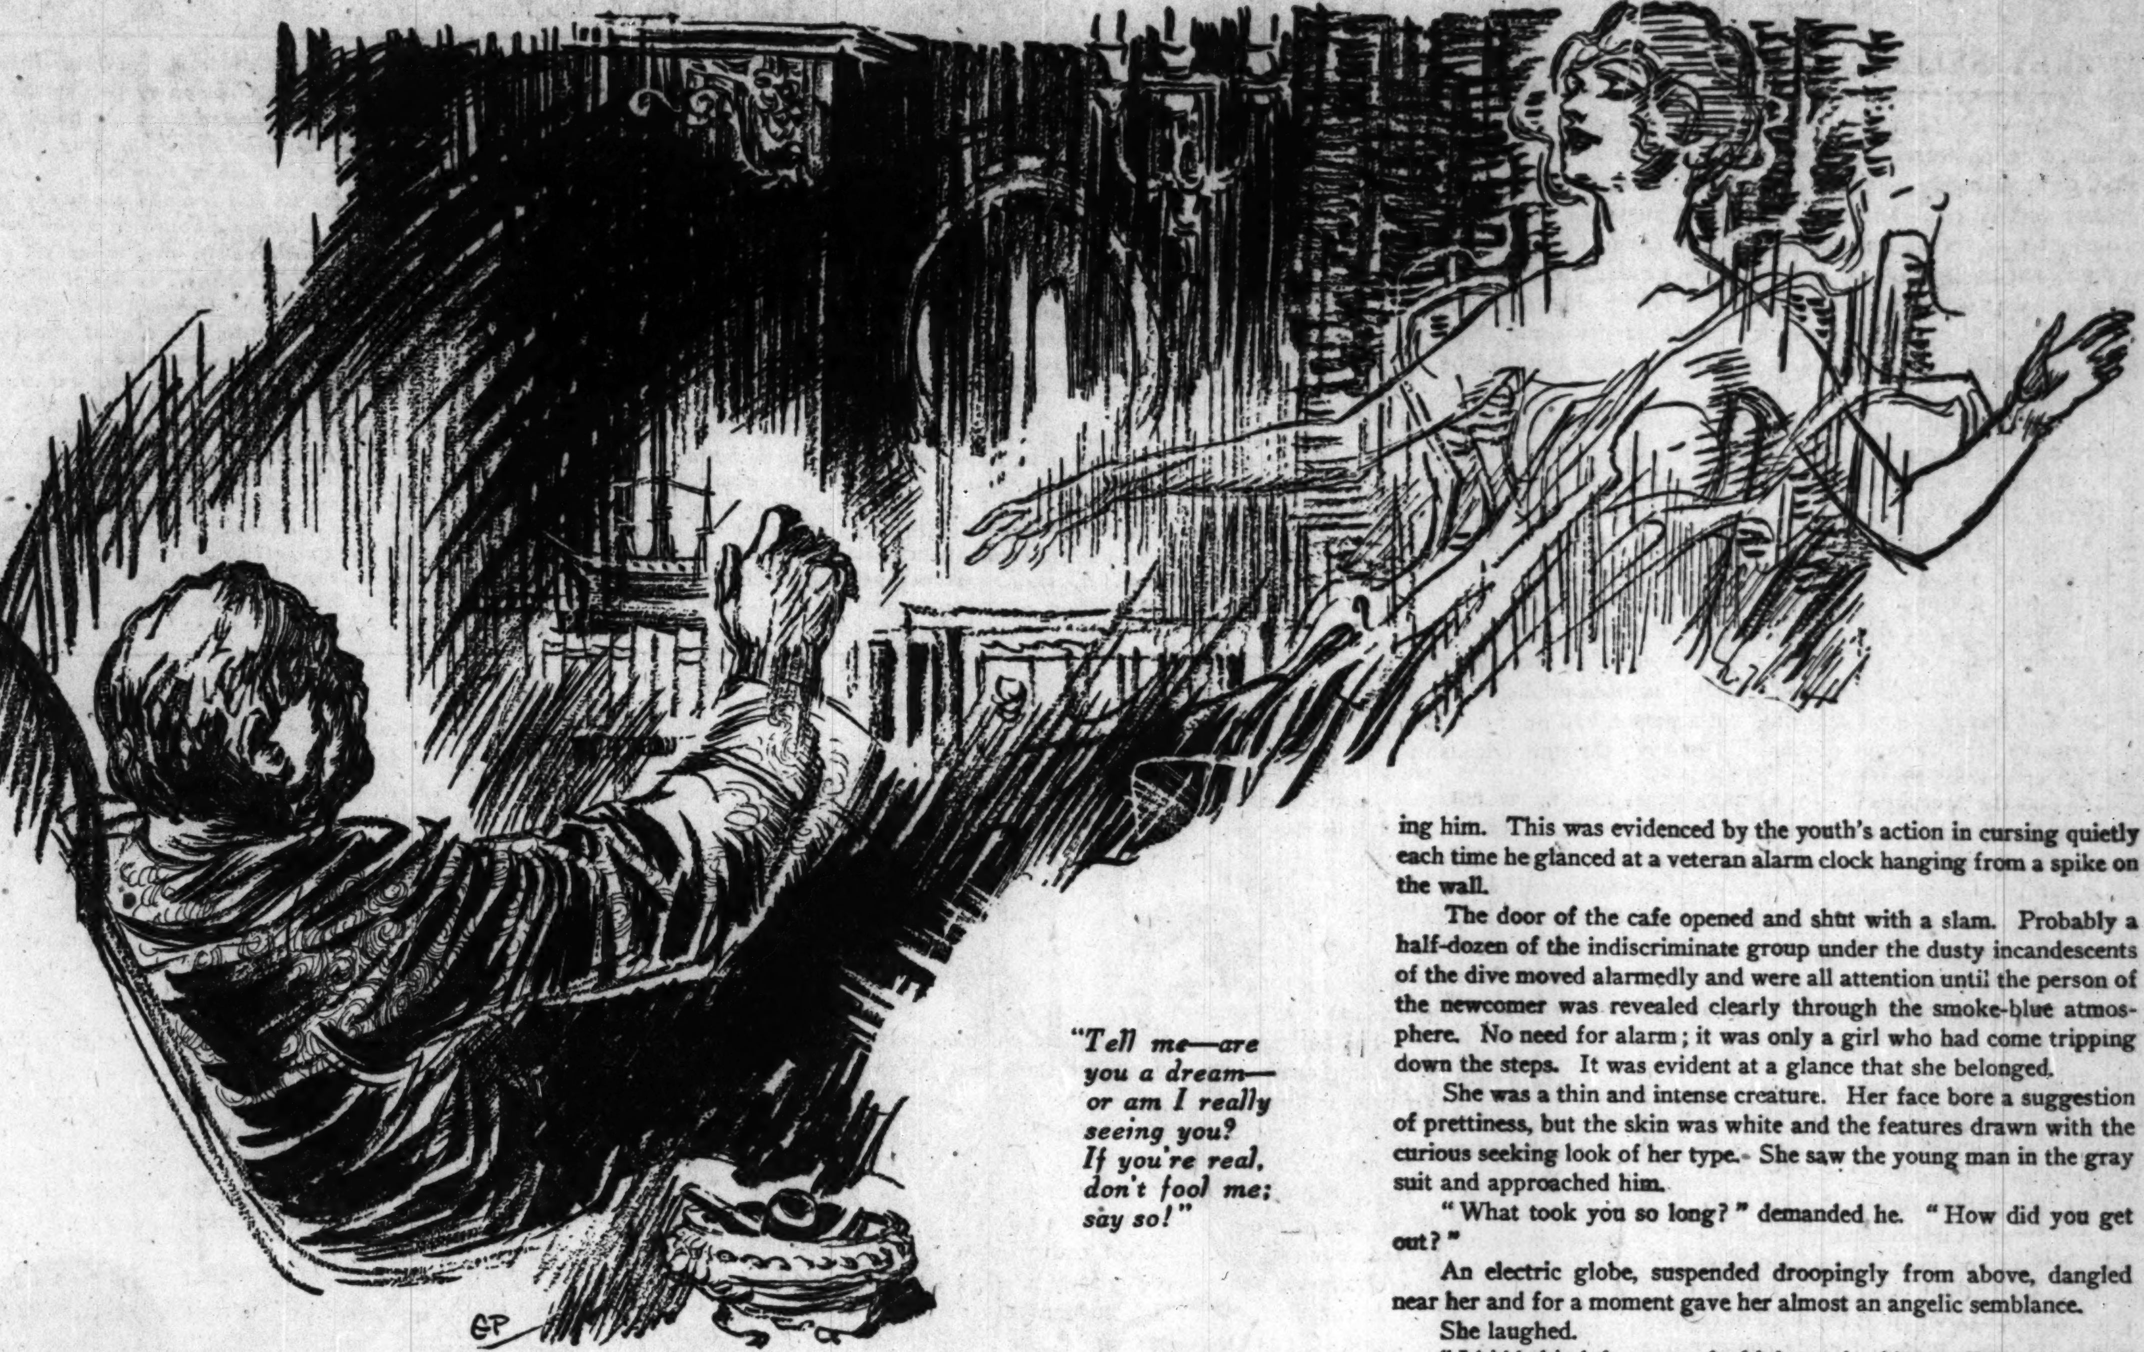
An Odd Tale of a Memory, a Picture, and a Ghost That Stepped from the Frame



"Tell me—are you a dream—or am I really seeing you? If you're real, don't fool me; say so!"

RUTHERFORD WESTON, multimillionaire and yet a failure, stepped dishearteningly from his imported Italian brougham and entered his granite front monastery on Dempster avenue—that once dignified thoroughfare where decadent homes of the old-rich protested unavailingly against the obtrusion of the commercial houses that were making wealth for a new generation.

With his lagging step and dispirited face, Rutherford Weston exemplified the antedated caste that was slowly giving up the struggle against the inroads of commercialism into the proud residential district of former days. Soon it would be time for Weston to surrender, but whether he would go willingly to seek peace and seclusion elsewhere was a matter undetermined.

Many things concerning this rich man were undetermined—his mode of living, his interests apart from money, his pleasures, if any. Weston was of the type of men who zealously guard their innermost selves from the world.

Chief among the truths which Rutherford Weston kept hidden away from the world was his knowledge of failure in life. Despite sheaf after sheaf of bonds in the First National vaults and the property on Dempster avenue that was now worth a small fortune alone in terms of the new generation, Weston conceded failure when he gave himself up to soliloquy, which was often of late.

Even though the mansion on Dempster avenue—Rutherford Weston's monastery, since he lived there with only the company of his antiques—was worth a fortune to fresh blood, the rich man would not have departed therefrom while life was with him for all the mammon the new rich might scrape together. For the home held all that the aged Croesus deemed worth while. Behind a Gobelin tapestry in the austere library was a picture. The picture and what it represented meant to the solitary inhabitant of the mansion the difference between relinquishing the struggle and living on.

WESTON, as do so many of the old rich who sometimes are less fortunate than the present day realizes, lived for memories. Other times had been happier. There had been Elsie, whose portrait, painted by an artist who transferred souls to the canvas, stood behind the Gobelin tapestry.

The portrait of Elsie smiled toward the tapestry, and out beyond when it was drawn aside, just as she had done years before. The smile, even in lifeless paint, seemingly illumined the chill library like a light when the tapestry was drawn.

Weston's eccentric pleasure in life was to sit in the library with the tapestry drawn, contemplating the smile of the pictured Elsie. The contemplation hearkened back memories of Elsie—the living Elsie—framed in a doorway instead of an oblong of gilt. Then indeed she had illumined the home on Dempster avenue and given it life.

The tragedy of Elsie was one of the things Rutherford Weston kept concealed closest from the menials who deferred to him in financial institutions and hesitantly sought him out on Dempster avenue for the signing of documents.

The tragedy and the stamp of failure it impressed on the secret self of the multimillionaire testified to the one weak spot in his nature—the tragedy he had been unable to outlive. Strong in most ways, cruel in all ways concerning money, Weston had been weak in the adversity that had centered about Elsie. Possibly the woman whose wraithlike figure, classical features, and gleaming skin had been preserved in pigment once was cruel to the man who found some kind of sad satisfaction in so frequently reminding himself of her.

Rutherford Weston's mind was on the woman and her portrait tonight as he made his slow way up the steps of the granite-front monastery, admitted himself with an old fashioned key, and listlessly hung his coat, muffler, and hat on an unprepossessing carved wood rack. The hall clock, ugly in keeping with nearly everything else in this hermitage, chimed out eleven o'clock as a greeting. The intonation of the ancient timepiece seemed wearied when it struck the final note.

Weston shivered, and reflected as he donned his lounging robe that the night was unusually damp. He might have retired immediately to recuperate from the protracted pre-midnight conference uptown, but he preferred his customary communion with the past, his ritual in the library.

ALTHOUGH it was exceptionally dark outside and the street lamps barely managed to pierce the wet gloom, Weston lit no light in the chamber that harbored the picture. A full length mirror opposite the portrait reflected upon it sufficient illumination from the street lamps, even in murky weather, to bring out the painted figure in relief from the background—a most lifelike effect. The frame itself was subdued, leaving the subject of the art work standing alone and apart.

Rutherford Weston loved to lie in his arm chair fronting the masterpiece, and imagine that the lighted figure was alive and only waiting a word.

As was customary, the multimillionaire seated himself in the chair, as ancient as the hall clock, and studied the dim tapestry, behind which was the picture of Elsie. He would not draw the tapestry yet. He would imagine that Elsie in life was back of it, waiting to smile at him and bridge the gulf of empty years. The futility of these thoughts, this ceremony, did not occur to Weston, because he was an old and eccentric man.

After a time the hall clock gathered courage, and made known that 12 o'clock had arrived. The labor of striking this hour over, it collapsed within itself, with a wheezing and whirring of wheels.

Weston sat motionless, although not asleep. Soon he would draw the veil and the reflected light from the street lamps would fall upon the painted features of Elsie. But the pleasure was keenest when delayed longest.

The clock chimed a sonorous 1. It wheezed again, then seemed to fall asleep for the night. Certainly its regular tick-tock, tick-tock, appeared to have relaxed into a faint reverberation.

During his anticipation of the hurtful pleasure to come, the multimillionaire felt the desire to slumber coming over him. He caught himself dozing, and stirred to partial wakefulness. The room was colder, and the damp from outside seemed to have seeped in. The street lamps flickered and sputtered. A hardy insect, defying the chill of the fall night, alighted on the globe of one. The shadow of the winged venturer, magnified to the proportions of a huge bat, was projected on the wall of Rutherford Weston's library.

Presently Weston started, and drew his robe more closely about him. Had the tapestry in front of him moved, or was the flicker of the arc lights deceiving him? No—— He trembled. A chill that was not of the atmosphere pervaded him. He drew his arm across his eyes, and wished he were not 65 and his vision uncertain. Surely, surely the tapestry he was facing had moved, and from out of the picture behind it had come a figure—a girl's figure—Elsie's!

THE multimillionaire felt his limbs stiffening. He tried to find his voice, but his throat was taut. He endeavored to rise, and was half glad he could not, lest he move forward and witness the diminishing of the vision—if that were what he beheld.

He waited until the blood ceased to pound in his ears, until he could collect himself. Then he waited again for the mist that had enveloped him to dissolve, after which he would make sure he was the victim of an hallucination.

But the figure limned so ethereally before him did not fade, did not become a part of the mist. Weston gradually began to experience a feeling of awe, of subservience to the supernatural; then the practicality for which he was noted in the everyday world caused him to shake his head to dismiss a persisting delusion.

The figure remained. Above the recurrent pounding of blood in his ears Weston heard his own words, unnatural themselves, voicing a thought that had come to his consciousness:

"Are—you—Elsie?"

He raged at his weak eyes that had been unable to perceive whether or not the figure had nodded. He grew bolder.

"Tell me—are you a dream—or am I really seeing you?"

No reply.

"If you're real, don't fool me, say so!" quailed the rich man, frightened and uncertain of his faculties. "I'm an old man—I can't stand much!" Tears, that might have been of self-pity, further obstructed his eyesight.

The figure persisted, but was voiceless. The rich man tried to think clearly in his stress, tried to find a reason for the state of mind that could lead him to such a delusion as he apparently was undergoing. He did not believe in ghosts. He had not been drinking. He was not insane——

The figure moved, and Rutherford Weston relapsed weakly in the chair.

"You are not real," he stammered; "yet I can see you there! I—I must have lost my mind!" He looked closer. "Are you really Elsie—come back to me?"

The lips of the figure moved and Weston heard:

"I am Elsie."

A torrent of tears poured down the rich man's cheeks. "I have waited a long time for you, Elsie. I've been lonely here. Let me turn on the lights. I can hardly see you."

The voice that replied was almost a sigh. "No, don't turn on the lights. I am just a spirit. You are seeing me in your mind. Close your eyes, and you can see me better."

Rutherford Weston closed his eyes.

"I am Elsie."

IN the east end of the city, crisscrossed by mean streets and meaner alleys, is a district unloved by the rich. Here, dodging at night even the hazy lamps that stand at occasional corners, move about society's disfavored. Up and down the dark sides of the streets and through the cavelike alleys slink these misfits, intent on the business of making a living through practices more favored by the pall of night than by the brightness of day.

Some of these nocturnal seekers after the necessities of life—and often more, if more can be got—hold quarters in a certain variety of cafe indigenous to the district. This type of cafe is generally found underground, in some basement or similar retreat beneath street or sidewalk level; where, ratlike, the prowlers feel secure.

This type of cafe always has refuge and refreshment to offer the prowlers, and sympathy and understanding; which explains why honest minions of the law seldom enter in daytime, and almost never after dark.

In such a cafe, at four o'clock in the morning, sat a young man clad in a tight gray suit, a squat black derby, low shoes, and an ungentle expression. On the floor near him, where it could be touched from time to time by an investigating foot, lay a bag bulging with contents of irregular contour. Incidentally, one side of the young man's jacket bulged unexplainedly, as if some kind of implements or tools were contained there in a wrapping.

The young man was partaking of refreshment which was liquid but nameless. It was obtained by glancing suggestively at a waiter, elevating the eyebrows, and assuming a knowing look. And it was swallowed with as little comment and even less question as to its origin.

The young man was waiting for some one who was late in joining him. This was evidenced by the youth's action in cursing quietly each time he glanced at a veteran alarm clock hanging from a spike on the wall.

The door of the cafe opened and shut with a slam. Probably a half-dozen of the indiscriminate group under the dusty incandescents of the dive moved alarmedly and were all attention until the person of the newcomer was revealed clearly through the smoke-blue atmosphere. No need for alarm; it was only a girl who had come tripping down the steps. It was evident at a glance that she belonged.

She was a thin and intense creature. Her face bore a suggestion of prettiness, but the skin was white and the features drawn with the curious seeking look of her type. She saw the young man in the gray suit and approached him.

"What took you so long?" demanded he. "How did you get out?"

An electric globe, suspended droopingly from above, dangled near her and for a moment gave her almost an angelic semblance.

She laughed.

"I hid behind that queer lookin' curtain sideways from the safe," she explained. "The old fool that lived in the house come in before I could get out the window after you. All I could do was slip back of the curtain. He sat down right in the same room. I waited until I thought he was asleep"—here she laughed again—"but he wasn't! He was starin' my way when I stepped out, and he thought I was a ghost. I didn't tell him no different, and let him fool himself until I could make a getaway!"

The Affair at Othman's by Will Payne

THE STORY THUS FAR.

FREDERICK OTHMAN, a man of some mystery, lives in New York in a house of forbidding aspect, surrounded by art treasures and other evidences of wealth. To him, one night, comes

NELSON BARLOW, a young society wastrel who has forged and embezzled under circumstances that put him in Othman's power. From Barlow Othman worms a story concerning

STAMFORD MARSDEN, a business man of reputed probity. The tale has to do with a girl, abandoned years before in a Maine village, and a child, supposedly Marsden's. Othman is in love with

FLORA MARSDEN, Stamford Marsden's daughter, and offers to help Barlow out of his difficulties if he will use his social position to bring about the match. There is a skillfully conducted courtship, in the course of which Othman extends much needed financial aid to Marsden. Meanwhile Othman has acquired control of a paper on which

PHILLIP KENDALL, a distant cousin of the Marsdens, is working as a reporter. Kendall, hopelessly in love with Flora, is not at all pleased when Othman directs him to investigate the story about her father's past. He finds Marsden's supposed child in Maine, however, and presently this girl turns up in New York in the care of a certain Mrs. Smith, who seems to have inclinations toward blackmail. Kendall suspects that Othman is manipulating the threatened scandal to increase his influence over the Marsdens. He is sure of it when he recognizes

JENKS, Othman's valet, as a man he once saw leaving Mrs. Smith's apartment. He accuses Othman of perpetrating a fake, there is a fight, and Kendall is ejected from the house by Jenks, murderously flourishing a revolver. Flora has promised to marry Othman, but changes her mind when Kendall, in desperation, reveals to her certain things he has learned about the man. On the night when she goes to Othman's house to break her engagement Othman is found murdered in the room in which his greatest art treasure, Titian's "Daphne," is hung. Flora admits having quarreled and struggled with Othman, but tells CAPTAIN WELBASKY, of the police, that she left before anything more serious occurred. Barlow was in the house, and his automatic is found hidden in the library, but the weapon proves not to have been discharged. Jenks, the valet, offers an alibi, substantiated by witnesses, to the effect that he had been sent out on an errand. Kendall is puzzled by encountering a mysterious stocky man loitering outside the house at dawn. Determined to protect Flora from arrest and notoriety, he enlists the aid of a political boss and undertakes to work night and day on the case if she be left unmolested. He thinks there has been a jewel robbery, and that Jenks has had a part in it. Barlow asks him, when he searches the house, to recover certain vouchers, incriminating Barlow, which Othman had in his possession.

THE murder of Frederic Othman was a crime that tingled even New York's crime jaded nerves. His great wealth, the air of mystery about him, the stories of scandalous living, the unnamed young woman who had been with him at the time he was shot, or immediately before, combined in a dramatic appeal to all the grosser curiosities. The town sat up, open mouthed. The case was talked of everywhere that morning. Any detail, even a matter so insignificant in itself as the visit to police headquarters of the man who helped Jenks to his feet after the fall on the sidewalk, brought an avalanche of extra editions. The same dramatic pull brought other men, and some women, to the police with information or suggestions.

One such visitor, arriving half an hour after Kendall left, was the architect who designed Othman's house. He came with information that there was a secret safe built in the wall of Othman's bedroom. Welbasky pricked up his ears at that. It suggested that his young ally's notion of a quantity of rare jewels might not have been so bad a guess after all. It was sufficiently important, at any rate, to be taken in hand personally. He drove up to Othman's house.

Kendall was already there, and from the time of their arrival the evening before the house had been completely in the possession of the police. Although Othman's death had been published to all America at breakfast that morning, not a person had put in a claim to represent him, through relationship or even through friendship. No kith or kin was known to any of his business associates in New York. His body had been removed to an undertaking establishment by order of the police without a single unofficial attendant. There at this hour it still lay solitary, derelict, unclaimed by a tie of blood or affection. Downtown, to be sure, there was an eager gossiping and speculating as to what disposition he had made of his wealth, where his will was, who his executors might be.

The assassin's shot had destroyed him in more than a physical sense. Alive, he had been much feared, much sought after for profit; but he had gone his own way, with few friends and no real intimates, his pleasures mainly of an unsocial, or anti-social sort. Nobody feared him now; there was no more profit to be had from him; the flood of scandal which his death unloosed made conservative gentlemen chary of claiming friendship with him. For the moment everybody stood back from him, startled—or alarmed for their own vulnerable reputations. In a back room at an undertaker's he lay alone. It was not until that afternoon that one Jacobs, in London, began bombarding official and unofficial persons in New York with cablegrams to the effect that he was Othman's first cousin and nearest living relative—and was coming to New York by first boat to claim the estate. Meanwhile there was no one to disturb the police in their possession of the house, and two uniformed officers outside kept the curious crowds moving.

AT the house Welbasky called Kendall and Detective O'Rourke into Othman's bedroom. The reporter had first seen this room on the preceding Tuesday, when Jenks drove him through it to the bathroom at the point of a pistol. It was long and narrow, with a broad window in the north end, taking up two-thirds of the wall space and overlooking the little garden at the rear of the house. A wainscoting of beautiful polished and paneled rosewood came up four feet from the floor. Above that the wall was painted with a formal, ornamental design of geometrical scrolls divided into panels four feet wide and six high, a bright colored framed print hanging in the center of each panel. A carved rosewood bed with a silken spread stood at the south end of the room near the door to the bathroom which had been Kendall's prison.

The police had already searched the room for the weapon with which Othman had been killed. Welbasky now asked his two companions if they could see any sign of a secret safe in the wall.

"Have to sound all the panels," said stout, phlegmatic O'Rourke, pointing to the polished wainscot.

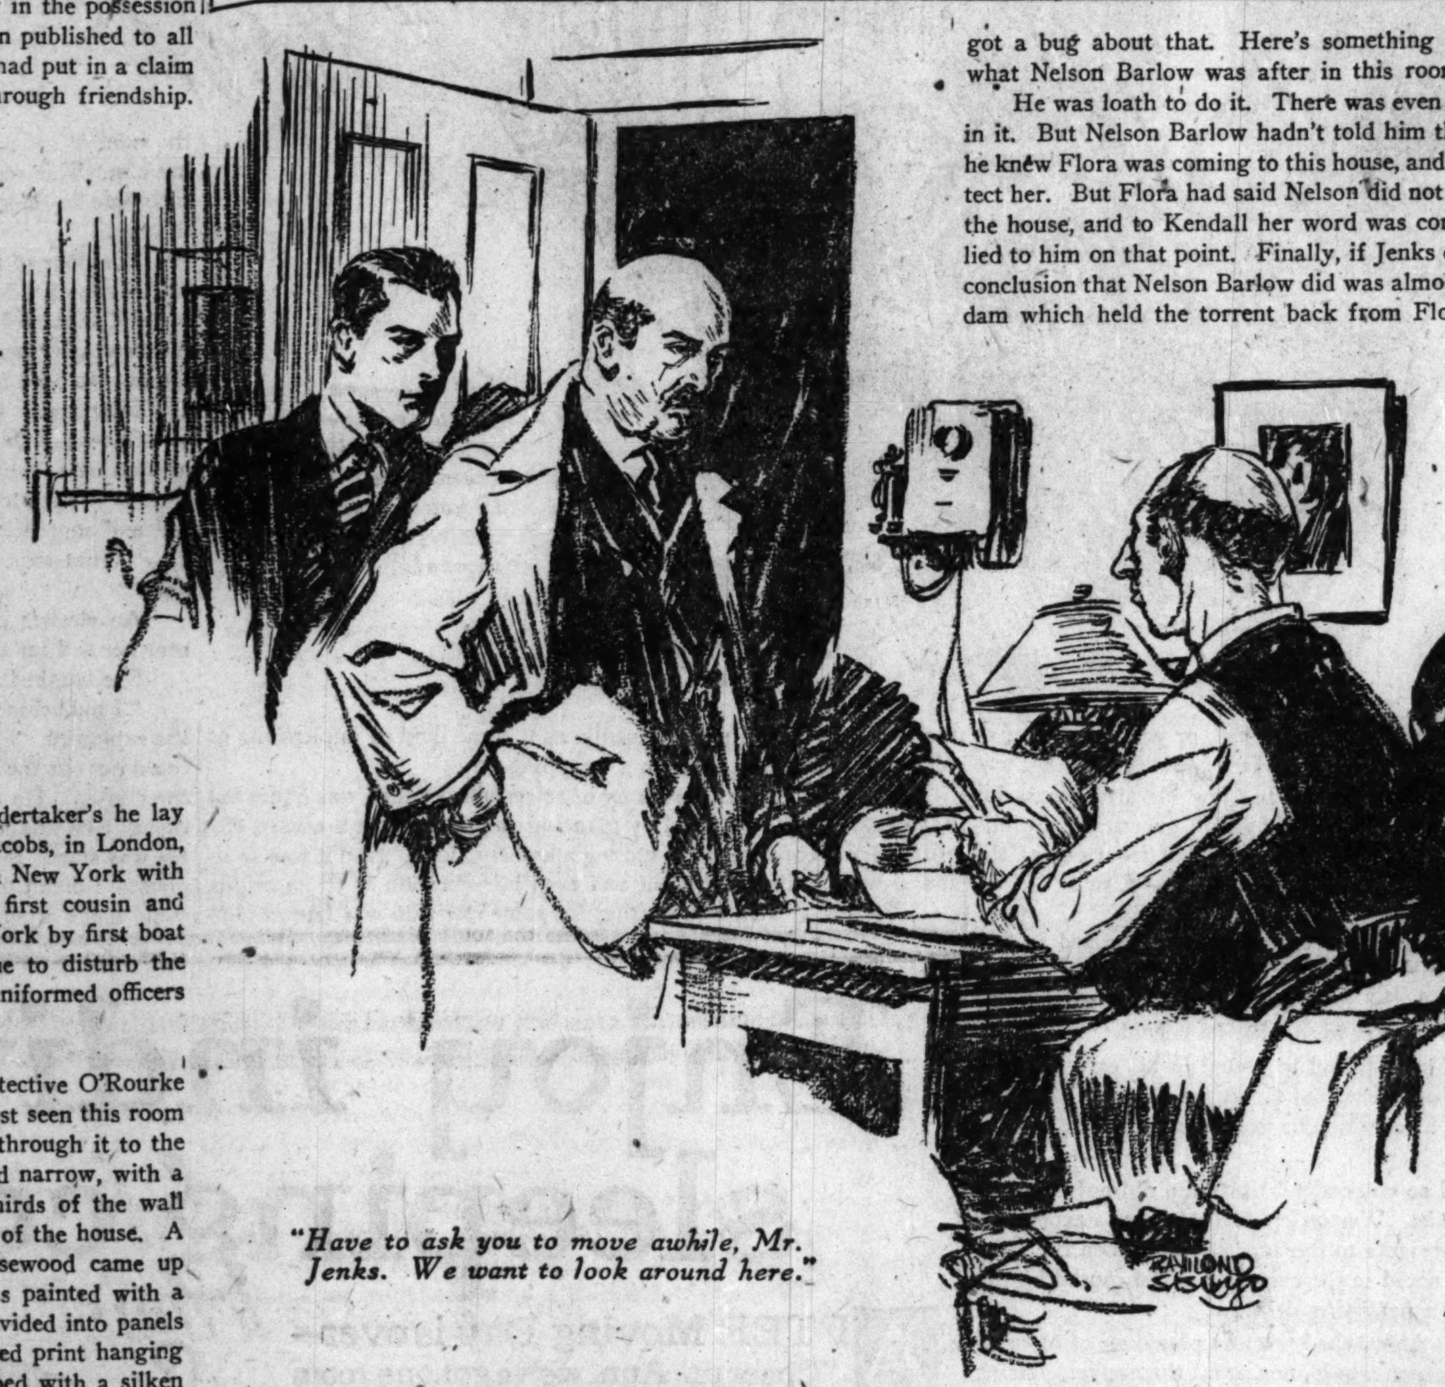
"Well, fetch Jenks and Willitts down; see what they know about it," Welbasky directed—for the servants were more or less marooned on the top floor.

When the lank faced valet and the respectable butler were brought in, Welbasky questioned them in turn regarding their dead master's jewelry. Jenks showed, at the dressing table, where studs, cuff buttons, stick pins, and the like were kept. He remembered once having seen some more precious jewelry—a large ornament for a woman's hair, set with fine diamonds, and a pair of bracelets containing precious stones. Mr. Othman had exhibited them to a lady caller. But Jenks had seen them only that once; no doubt Mr. Othman kept them in a safe deposit box somewhere. The butler had never seen even that much jewelry in the house, unless that case of rare coins down in the library could be called jewelry. Both Butler and valet were positive they had never heard of any such thing as a secret safe in the master's bedroom.

By that time the architect and two expert workmen for whom he had waited reached the house. The architect, trim, brisk, with glittering eyeglasses and a perfectly pointed grizzled beard, stepped over to the east wall of the room and laid the point of his slim walking stick on a spot eighteen inches above the wainscot. There were five painted panels on that wall. In the center one, where the architect pointed, the geometrical design piled up in a complicated scroll. All the spectators now saw that the point of the architect's stick rested on a tiny keyhole. It was like one of those puzzle pictures at which one stares in vain until the hidden design is pointed out; then it is as plain as the nose on a face; looking a second time one sees it at a glance. Any one might have looked at this painted scroll a thousand times and noticed nothing unusual in it. But when it was pointed out, one saw easily that there was a tiny keyhole in that dot of black paint. Both Jenks and Willitts stared at it now with a sort of incredulity.

Jenks collected his master's keys—all that he knew of—but not one would fit the thin hole in the wall. The rug was moved, a cloth spread to save the polished floor, and the two expert workmen attacked the wall. The safe itself readily yielded to their drills and was open within three-quarters of an hour. Evidently it had not been designed to resist burglers, but only for concealment—a simple box of half inch steel, two feet high, a foot and a half wide, and a foot deep, divided in half by a metal shelf.

It contained a glittering tiara to be worn on a woman's head, and nothing else. The ornament was a large one, rather suggesting the stage or a court pageant. Its workmanship was a masterpiece of the jeweler's art, and it sparkled with diamonds. But a second glance showed that all of the stones except the three central ones were quite small, and those three were by no means extraordinary in size or quality. In fine, a showy thing, and valuable on account of the workmanship; but after looking it over a minute Kendall doubted that it would fetch a hundred thousand dollars at auction.



"Have to ask you to move awhile, Mr. Jenks. We want to look around here."

To be sure, a hundred thousand dollars was much money to a servant, and if Othman had been killed for robbery why hadn't this been taken? Moreover, if Jenks knew of this safe in the wall, he had played the role of ignorance convincingly. Welbasky, at least, appeared to be convinced, for he remarked drily to the reporter:

"Well, that don't help much."

They had gone out into Daphne's room together and the policeman added, with a sober significance, "Looks like a wild goose chase. Chasing wild geese won't answer long."

Kendall understood. It was only by an unusual indulgence that Welbasky had permitted Flora to stay at home last night, and kept her name from the newspapers. A word high up from Roger Muldoon had powerfully strengthened her defenses. But it could not last long. All New York, all the country, was agog over this murder. It put the police on trial. Probably by this evening, but certainly by tomorrow morning, impatient criticism would be heard. Why weren't the police doing something effective? Above all, why were they shielding that mysterious young woman who was with Othman almost at the moment he was shot? Kendall was sensible enough to admit that the circumstances fairly justified the police in publicly laying hands upon her. As he looked upon it, arresting her would be merely tossing her to the hungry wolves. But the pressure to do that would soon be irresistible. Yet it mustn't happen; he felt it to be almost as unendurable as an actual, physical tossing to the wolves.

"See here, captain, I know you are square with me. I appreciate it. But listen for a minute. That thing we've just seen is worth, maybe, a hundred thousand dollars. I doubt it would fetch that much. That's small change for Othman. Why the newspapers said his collection of rare coins was worth near a hundred thousand; exaggerated, maybe; but it's worth a lot of money. And it's down there in the library in a glass case that anybody could break into with a kick. He wouldn't have gone to the bother of a safe in the wall just to hide a hundred thousand dollars worth of jewelry. Jenks has been his valet over ten years, close to him, going in and out of that bedroom ever since this house was built. You can see at a glance that he's an inquisitive, prying sort of rat. He knew that safe was there. It couldn't have escaped him. He knew there was more in it than what we've just seen. Look at his lank jaws and piggy eyes and chalky face!"

He was going on; but Welbasky interrupted him, with some irritation: "Haven't you got it through your nut yet that I can't charge a man with murder on his mug? Haven't I shown you that Jenks is out of it? For Pete's sake, man, take a bromide; you've got a bug in your bean." The captain, in fact, was starting for the door.

But Kendall laid a hand on his arm, with: "Well, say I have got a bug about that. Here's something different. I'll show you what Nelson Barlow was after in this room."

He was loath to do it. There was even some flavor of treachery in it. But Nelson Barlow hadn't told him the truth. He'd said that he knew Flora was coming to this house, and had followed her to protect her. But Flora had said Nelson did not know she was coming to the house, and to Kendall her word was conclusive. So Nelson had lied to him on that point. Finally, if Jenks didn't shoot Othman, the conclusion that Nelson Barlow did was almost inescapable. The frail dam which held the torrent back from Flora could not stand long without reinforcement. If somebody had to be thrown to the wolves let it be Nelson Barlow. So the affair stood in Kendall's mind when Welbasky contemptuously rejected his fantastic suspicion of the valet.

The policeman caught the suggestion with a "Now you're saying something."

KENDALL led him over to the richly carved chest with a scarlet cloth upon it near the bedroom door, and in a moment found the shallow drawer which Barlow had mentioned. Four pieces of pale blue paper still lay in it. The detectives had already found that drawer and looked at the papers, which, however, appeared to be business documents of no especial significance.

"That's what he was after," said Kendall. "I went to see him this morning, hoping he'd know about some rare gems here. I told him I was going to take a hand in searching the house. He asked me to get these for him—slip 'em in my pocket without saying anything to anybody. He said they meant nothing in particular—just some vouchers that he'd brought up from the office for Othman to see and wished to return to the office files. That sounded fishy to me. You see, they're vouchers from the office of the cartridge company. Probably you can find out what they mean down there. They're important enough that he was willing to take a risk to get hold of them. If somebody's got to be tied to the stake, let it be him."

"Sure!" Welbasky assented. "I'm with you there. This is something worth talking about." He was examining the papers with interest.

"But you won't forget to have Jenks searched if he leaves the house," Kendall reminded him. "And I'd like to search his room now."

Welbasky laughed helplessly. "All right, Nut. If you want to amuse yourself that way, I'll give you O'Rourke. There's no better man."

The valet occupied a bedroom with its own bath and closet at the rear of the fifth story, convenient to the stairs which led down to his master's quarters. Two windows gave good light and ventilation; and the room, about fifteen feet square, was simply but comfortably furnished with bed, bureau, a small table, two easy chairs. No money had been lavished on it, yet as a habitation it was superior to Kendall's own lodging on Ninth street.

The door stood a little ajar. Stout O'Rourke, grown gray in the police service and so inured to the work that he would probably have taken an earthquake without batting an eyelash, pushed it open without bothering to knock. The lank valet sat at the little table, pencil in hand, engaged in some literary composition.

The phlegmatic detective addressed him: "Have to ask you to move awhile, Mr. Jenks. We want to look around here."

Jenks looked up at Kendall, rather than at the officer of the law; a malicious look the reporter thought, for he did not deny he was prejudiced.

"Make yourselves at home," he replied cheerfully, and swept his writing materials into the drawer of the desk. Rising, he gave a glance round the room, and went out silently.

The walls were plain, gray plaster, unpapered, with a mopboard at the bottom eight or ten inches high. The window casings were of a simple pattern. The floor was of matched ash; not a difficult room to search. First, however, Kendall went over to the table and opened the drawer. Jenks' interrupted composition already filled four letter size sheets in a small, irregular hand—school boyish, like that of a man but little used to handling a pen. The composition was quite as amateurish as the penmanship. After reading a page and glancing over the rest, Kendall perceived that it was meant to be an account of the murder of Frederic Othman told by his valet. But in the four pages Jenks had barely got through with the introduction which consisted largely of a catalogue of the dead man's virtues. Why was Jenks spending his time in that manner?

He put the papers back in the drawer, and they began the search, Kendall taking instruction from the fleshy expert who sighed a little with resigned patience, as he got down on his knees. The room had been searched before for a weapon; but this was to be a thorough combing. Not only were drawers emptied, but the bureau was tapped and measured for a secret receptacle. Clothing in the closet, mattress, pillows, chair cushions were explored. They went over the floor on hands and knees, looking for loose boards. They sounded the mopboards, tried the joints in them, tapped and pried at window casings. Every tile in the bathroom was fingered.

AT the end of two hours O'Rourke heaved himself to an upright posture, gently rubbed his back, then dusted his knees and announced, "If there's anything here, I'll eat it."

Kendall had to admit that the search had been thorough, and he felt defeated. Unreasonably, no doubt, he had banked on this room. It was all unreasonable enough; he could see that it must look so to capable Captain Welbasky. But Othman had been murdered. There was no sign of a struggle. Apparently he had been shot down without the least show for his life. The way Jenks had looked when he leveled a pistol at Kendall kept coming up in the reporter's mind—the lank jaws and narrowed eyes with a sort of devilish little grin in them. Jenks, in fine, had the heart of a murderer, and when a murder has been committed you naturally look for a murderer. To be sure, in this case, the murderer was outside the house, while Nelson Barlow, who wasn't a murderer at heart, was inside. A sensible man would say that murders are often committed in sudden rage or panic by men who are not particularly murderers at heart; sticking to Jenks was unreasonable. All the same, Kendall had really banked on finding something in this room and was heavily disappointed, as he followed stout O'Rourke downstairs.

Apparently, in making way for them to search his room Jenks had gone only as far as Daphne's room. At any rate there he was talking to Sergeant Ferguson, when O'Rourke and Kendall stepped in. He was neither exactly standing in the attitude of a servant, nor exactly sitting down in the attitude of an equal, but perched on the arm of a chair, talking quite familiarly, and the lolling sergeant seemed interested.

Jenks looked around when the reporter and detective stepped in and arose, approaching them. It was to Kendall that he spoke, in a composed and servantlike manner:

"I'm trying to write out an account of Mr. Othman's murder, sir. I'm not much at writing. But I've been with Mr. Othman eleven years. The newspapers are printing a lot about it. I thought, coming from me—written by Mr. Othman's valet—some newspaper might buy it."

He was evidently seeking helpful information on the subject from one who presumably knew. And, astonished, Kendall replied: "Why, yes; no doubt they would. Try the Star. But it wouldn't be necessary for you to write it yourself, you know. You could tell it to a reporter; he'd write it and you'd sign it. It's often done that way. Try the Star."

"I see. Thank you, sir," Jenks replied with respectful gratitude. He hesitated an instant. "They'd pay for it? Pay something worth while? You see, sir, we're all practically out of a job here. I haven't much money; I thought I might pick up something that way."

"O, yes; they'd pay," Kendall assured him. "You ought to get several hundred dollars. If the Star doesn't offer enough try another paper. Probably you can telephone from here—soon."

"Thank you, sir," said Jenks.

Kendall went on, in astonishment, thinking: "No doubt I'm unreasonable about it; he's just an ordinary blockheaded flunky. But am I unreasonable?"

It was already mid-afternoon, and as he left the house he felt dismally empty handed. But he had thrown one anchor to the windward in the person of Nelson Barlow. That anchor held.

And the first newspaper that came to his hands gave notice of another anchor to the windward. It was an extra edition of the Evening Forum. About one o'clock a blonde young woman entered that newspaper's business office, handed in typewritten copy for a personal advertisement, to be double leaded, paid the price, and walked out. The copy read as follows:

> PERSONAL—O—man! O—man! The gentleman who has the diamonds is well known to friends of K——. Communicate at once with right parties and avoid unpleasant consequences.

The youthful clerk who took in the advertisement looked it over only perfunctorily, pasted it to a form, and sent it upstairs to the composing room. But the editorial departments of all newspapers were on tiptoe over the Othman murder, and some of that thrill pervaded the Forum's composing room. A compositor called editor's attention to the odd heading—which might be merely an illiterate way of trying to express "O, man!" or which might have some important significance. At any rate, anything which could be tured into a connection with the Othman case was good news; the Forum repeated this mysterious advertisement on its front page, with such description of the blonde advertiser as it could gather from the youthful clerk.

Kendall thought immediately of that stocky man with his lidded eyes. This advertisement, he believed, did have an important relation to the Othman murder.

MID-AFTERNOON of that Saturday following the murder Frederic Othman, Marsden was called home by a telephone message. Oftener than not, on week days, he breakfasted alone; his wife and daughter having breakfast in their rooms. This morning he was alone at the table when he unfolded the newspaper and saw Othman's name in big, black letters.

There had been a loathness in his mind from the moment he heard of Flora's engagement. She must be free to make her own choice, and the money was mighty welcome; yet there had been a secret shock and recoil. Now, as he read the newspaper, a sort of half-transparent mask fell off; the fellow stood revealed. On the day before, the engagement having been definitely fixed, Othman had put a sum of money at the disposal of the shipping concerns and passed word for a bond issue; for the present, at least, the concern would float. Marsden thought of that business aspect of the matter almost at once. And he wondered how Tops really felt; how much she had cared for the man and how much for the money. Well, it was done now; she and her mother might as well have their morning sleep out. The notion that Tops might already know of this murder never occurred to him. He told the maid to send the newspaper up to her when she called for her breakfast, and so left the matter.

Flora was already wide awake, a self-confessed coward. The sleepless night had not helped her to face it, so she lay still, like hunted game in a thin cover. The newspaper was taken up to her, and she sent it on to her mother. Mrs. Marsden read it, and understood why Flora was keeping to her room that morning—a great shock to her, of course. Thus the morning passed. But this hiding in bed was the sheerest cowardice—and childish, for the thing had to be faced. Sometimes her father came home to luncheon on Saturdays. Flora got up and dressed, preparing herself. This Saturday, however, he did not come home and, presently, she telephoned for him. Only then did she try to prepare her mother, saying:

"Mother, dear, I've sent for father. I want to tell you both. I was at Mr. Othman's last night just before he was shot. Don't be afraid, mother; I had nothing to do with the shooting. It will all come out right in the end, but you and father ought to know. We'll wait a few minutes until he comes, then I'll tell you both."

She had put it off partly because there was something in the story that she could not tell her parents; something she had not told Phillip Kendall, and would not disclose to anybody. And in thinking of the matter that forbidden part kept intruding; it was always weaving itself back into the drama in spite of her effort to keep it out. In her thinking about it, that suppressed part cast a tinge of falsehood on what she was going to tell. But what she could disclose she told clearly, beginning with Kendall's letter, which she had burned.

THE letter, she said, cast her into a great doubt and dismay, so she sent for Nelson Barlow and showed it to him. He told her she should not marry Othman. Then she telephoned Othman's house and went up there to get the engagement announcement. Othman seized her, she struck him, and ran out. There was a sound; she didn't identify it as a pistol; it seemed too dull a sound for a shot; more like a door slamming. She hurried on out of the house and came home Phillip came later to tell her Othman had been shot. Then two detectives came and questioned her. She was the woman whom the newspapers mentioned as having visited Othman just before he was killed. Nelson Barlow was the man who was in the house at the time; evidently Nelson had gone up there soon after leaving her.

"I suppose they may come for me again—any time. I think Phillip is working all the while, trying to find out who did it. I know nothing about the shooting itself. That's the way it stands, father."

What Marsden chiefly felt was a frightful helplessness, as though he had received a message: "We're coming in a little while to drag your daughter through the streets at a cart's tail," and was powerless to prevent it. He believed Flora's account, as a matter of course, but he saw in how dangerous a situation it left her. With all of a father's pride and sensitiveness, he shrank in every fiber from the ruthless publicity that impended—soiling her name in this muddy water, like putting her up in a cage to be gaped at ribaldly. But what could a man do? Of course, he could engage a lawyer, set some private detectives at work; but meanwhile they might be after her at any moment.

He felt baffled, like a strong man immersed in an element against which his strength is useless. And he was reluctant to make any move, as though, by making a move he tacitly acknowledged that his daughter's name needed protection. Besides, it was Saturday afternoon; law offices would be closed. At a loss, with a demoralizing sense of helplessness, he sat speculating about the murder. The conversation fell into a pointless drift, disjointed, half-absent, until Jennie came in to say that Mr. Kendall wished to speak with Flora on the telephone.

The message was brief: "They've taken Nelson Barlow into custody. They have some new evidence against him. They're holding him without bail as a material witness at present. It's bound to come out right for you."

She went back to her parents with the shock of that in her mind and a quite natural selfish relief, too. "Poor Nelly," she added, after giving them the message; and in sudden confidence: "I was afraid of it. He really hated Othman."

Her father and mother could repeat "Poor Nelly" with a perfectly natural selfish relief, because it seemed to withdraw the sword from over Flora's head. The police must have evidence against Nelson and that would divert them from her.

Welbasky, in fact, had sent those four pieces of pale blue paper to the president of the cartridge company. When the president heard that Nelson Barlow, for whom he had little regard, was the man who was in Othman's house at the time of the murder and that he had attempted to get possession of these pieces, of paper when Othman lay dead, he explained candidly that they were evidence of forgery committed by Barlow. Mr. Othman had taken the matter into his own hands. What conversations he'd had with Nelson Barlow about it, what arrangement or understanding existed between them, the president did not know. But Nelson Barlow had forged and Othman held the evidence in the shape of these four vouchers. Undoubtedly Barlow had wished to get possession of them.

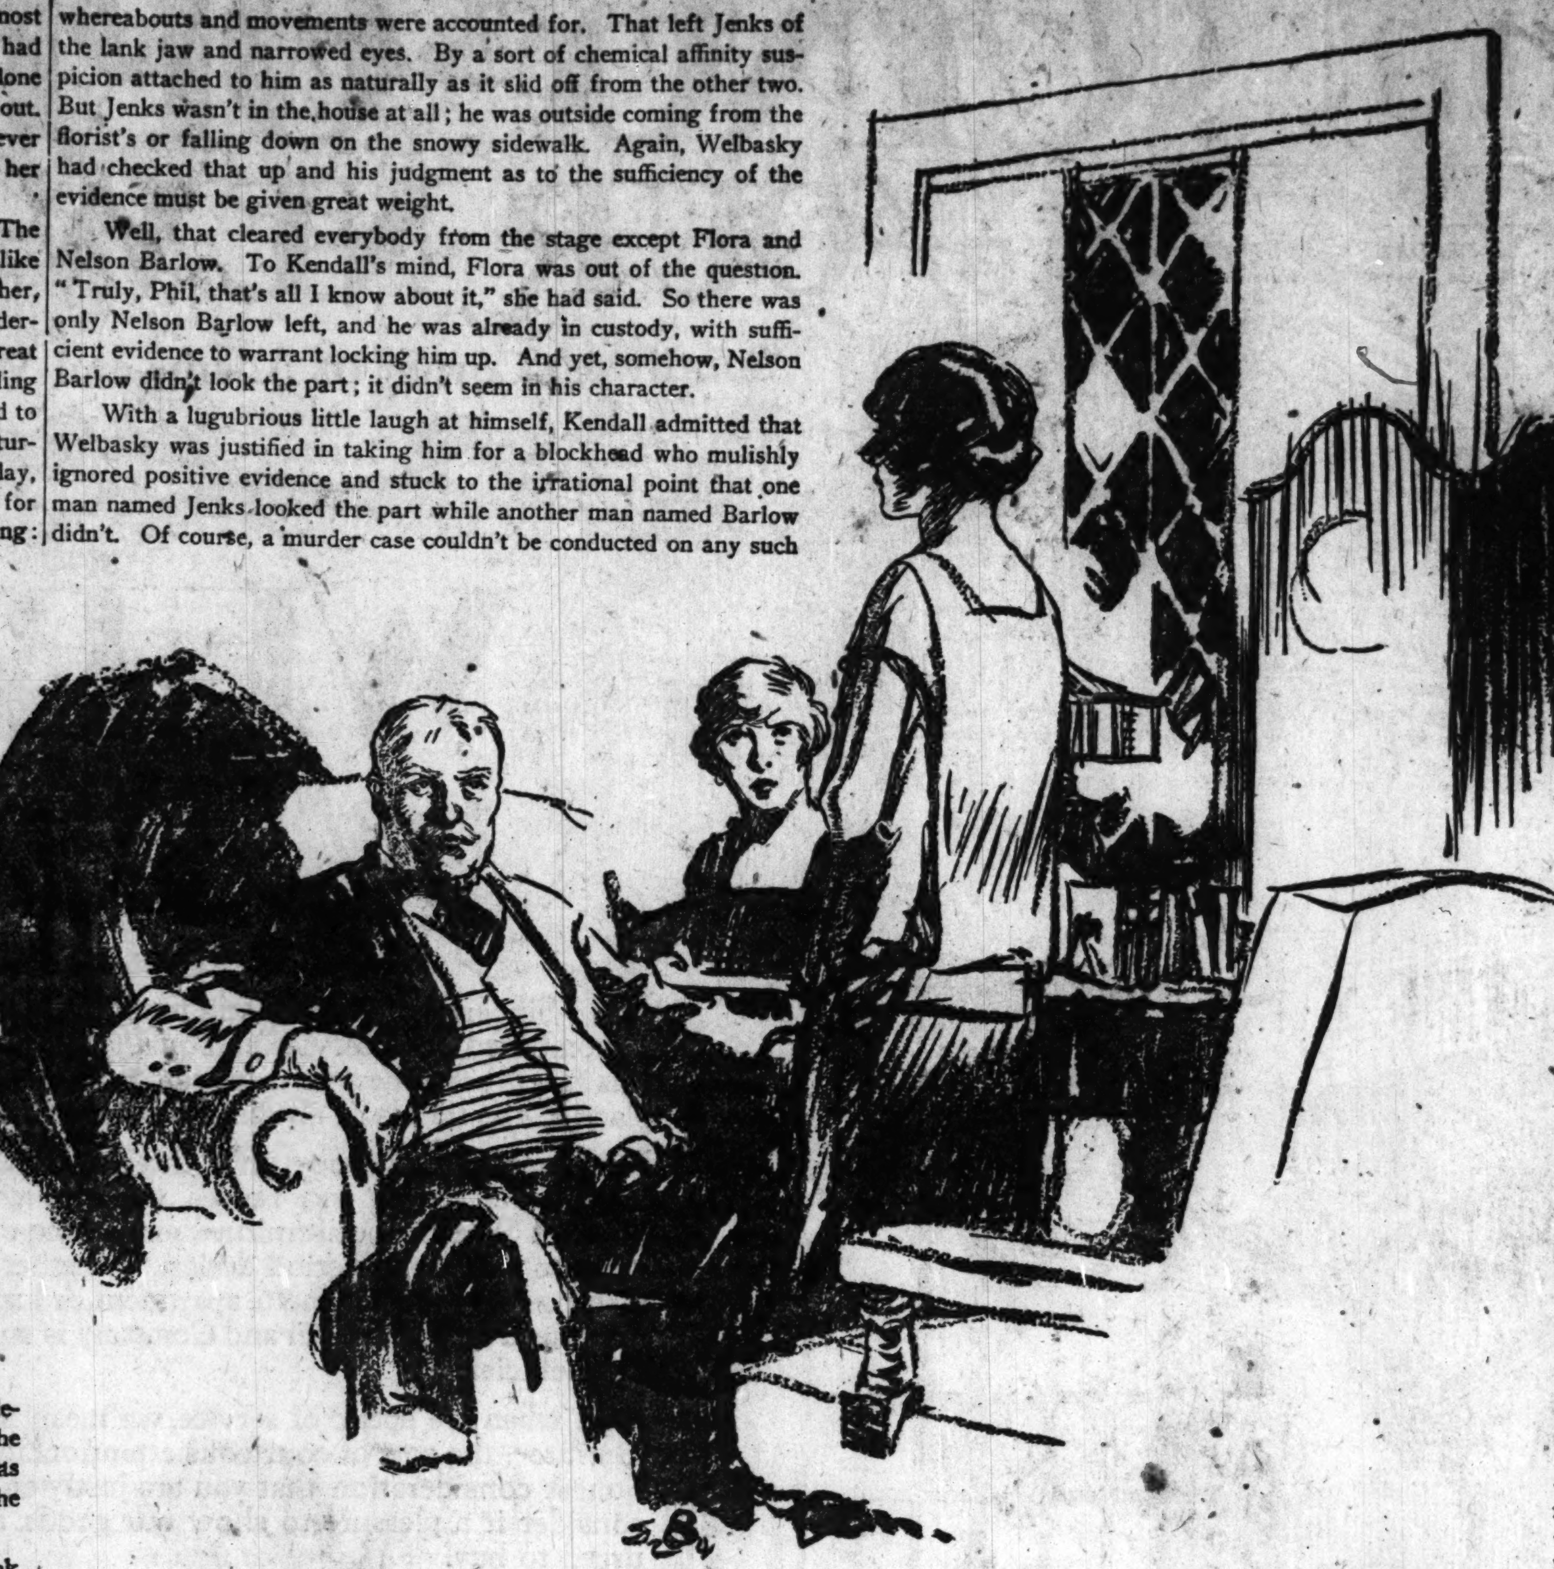
Here, then, was a perfectly clear cut, plausible motive for murder. These pieces of paper meant penitentiary for Barlow. That a man in his position might kill in order to get possession of them would look credible to any jury. After a consultation at headquarters, therefore, Welbasky ordered Barlow taken in custody and cut off from all outside communication. The official statement to the newspapers said merely that new evidence had been discovered and Barlow was held for the present as a material witness; but formal arrest of one or more persons on a charge of murder might be expected soon.

Kendall also felt relief. As one might say, the wolves had got their victim. The sensation of Nelson Barlow's detention would relieve the pressure on the dam for a day, especially as tomorrow was Sunday. But he felt in his bones that it was only a temporary relief. Flora Marsden was still in the trap. She'd been so close to it, fairly brushing it with her skirt, that she would be in danger until the riddle was finally solved.

And when he turned to the solving, Jenks kept bobbing up in his obstinate head. All the servants had been checked up. In a general way Welbasky's judgment about the sufficiency of the evidence in regard to them must be trustworthy. Only three of them were, so to speak, on the stage, or within the scope of the affair. Two of the three—namely, Willitts, the respectable butler, and young Fritz, the [illegible]—fairly disarmed suspicion at a glance. Besides, their whereabouts and movements were accounted for. That left Jenks of the lank jaw and narrowed eyes. By a sort of chemical affinity suspicion attached to him as naturally as it slid off from the other two. But Jenks wasn't in the house at all; he was outside coming from the florist's or falling down on the snowy sidewalk. Again, Welbasky had checked that up and his judgment as to the sufficiency of the evidence must be given great weight.

Well, that cleared everybody from the stage except Flora and Nelson Barlow. To Kendall's mind, Flora was out of the question. "Truly, Phil, that's all I know about it," she had said. So there was only Nelson Barlow left, and he was already in custody, with sufficient evidence to warrant locking him up. And yet, somehow, Nelson Barlow didn't look the part; it didn't seem in his character.

With a lugubrious little laugh at himself, Kendall admitted that Welbasky was justified in taking him for a blockhead who mulishly ignored positive evidence and stuck to the irrational point that one man named Jenks looked the part while another man named Barlow didn't. Of course, a murder case couldn't be conducted on any such whimsical grounds as that. All the same, Jenks—jewels—what had that blocky man to do with it? Who was behind that queer ad in the Forum?



"I suppose they may come for me again—any time. I know nothing about the shooting itself. That's the way it stands, father."

Six o'clock and darkness found him opposite Othman's house. Jenks—jewels—the blocky man. As methodically as though he were proceeding upon the most exact reasoning, he began patrolling the block. It was rather difficult, especially to a novice, because in this short and eminently respectable residence block between Madison avenue and Fifth there was almost no cover, no shop to loiter in, nothing to get behind; and one couldn't stand still long without attracting undesirable attention. He made the best shift he could—strolling, stopping, moving on, turning back. Shortly before six he had fortified himself with food, so as to be on guard promptly at six, for Welbasky had told him that any of the servants who wished to leave the house on parole after six o'clock would be permitted to do so. Yes, he said, Jenks would be searched if he went out; but he said it with so much derision that Kendall was ashamed to ask him to have Jenks shadowed also. He proposed to do the shadowing himself.

WORKING under disadvantages and having no experience at the trade, he almost lost the valet. At the south Fifth avenue corner he paused as though he might be waiting for somebody, and to help on that appearance he looked down the avenue a long moment. Then he turned north to cross the intersecting street and once more raised his eyes to the odd yellow brick facade upon which, it seemed to him, his vision had been fairly glued for almost an hour. It gave back the same immobile yellow image. Then his heart bounded, for a rod east of the house a tall figure was moving rapidly away toward Madison avenue. This was a few minutes past seven. On Fifth avenue a foot passenger, or several, went by every few seconds, and there must have been a dozen or more people moving afoot in the cross street. But he thought that tall figure was Jenks, who had come out of the house while his back was turned, now striding briskly east, already near half the short block away.

Running wouldn't do. He hurried, but Jenks moved about as fast as he could without actually running. Two leisurely pedestrians, a man and a woman, got in the way. When Kendall passed them he saw that something had happened. Jenks had halted. Two other figures were close beside him; one of the figures was broad and squat. Kendall had to moderate his pace, for he did not wish Jenks to recognize him. The three figures stood close together. Jenks seemed to be talking. Then they moved slowly toward Madison avenue. At the corner they halted again for a moment. Surely Jenks was talking. The group separated, Jenks striding south in Madison avenue without a backward look; the other two standing on the corner looking after him. One of them, beyond question, was the short, broad man whom Kendall had encountered in this street early that morning.

Kendall took his life in his hands, in respect of rushing cars and taxis, and struck diagonally across to the south Madison avenue corner. Reaching it and looking down the avenue, he caught a glimpse of Jenks, and followed. People and vehicles at the cross streets got in the way; he soon lost sight of the valet. But this was the way to Mrs. Josephine Smith's modest apartment on Forty-fifth street.

Of course, Jenks might be going anywhere; but Mrs. Smith's was the only objective Kendall could think of, so he went to Forty-fifth street. There he paced, loitered, watched, imposed upon the hospitality of a delicatessen shop and a tobacco shop as long as he dared. The cold strengthened. He huddled in his coat, hands in pockets, kicked his feet against the icy pavement to keep them warm. It was dull work, loitering, pacing, standing still awhile and moving on. A dozen times he passed the dingy oak street door with its small panel of glass near the top. Jenks might not be up there at all; might be snugly back in Othman's house, or anywhere. The little clock in the delicatessen shop as he drifted past the window seemed to have stopped, or at least to move only a quarter as fast as a clock should. He had four hours of it.

Then, as he was across the street, a lank figure came out of the dingy oak door, carrying something in his right hand. Jenks, undoubtedly; by that time the watcher would fairly have known him by his long legged, brisk stride. Without bothering to look around, the valet struck west, moving rapidly and confidently as though without a notion of being watched or followed. At the corner of Lexington avenue Kendall was near enough to see plainly that the object in Jenks' right hand was an ordinary black folding typewriter case. With no difficulty he trailed Jenks back to Othman's house, into which the valet disappeared. By that time the watcher was thoroughly refrigerated and weary with standing and pacing. He took a bus down the avenue, got some warm food and coffee, and reached his lodging a couple of minutes before midnight.

There was still a little chill in his back as he dropped into the most comfortable chair of the two in the room and lighted a pipe. A threadbare sort of room, with some cracks in the faded old wall paper; the varnish blistered on the side of the bureau near the steam radiator—a radiator that sometimes thumped like the devil early in the morning. A tired young man, puffing his pipe in the chair, for he had been on the go since half-past four that morning.

A long stone's throw to the south Flora Marsden was probably asleep, or, if awake, thinking of anybody rather than of an unplaced, moneyless, unmannerly reporter who happened to be a distant relative. Doubtless she'd never know what he was doing. Or, if she did know she would pay him with a smile and a gracious word, and ask him to congratulate her when she married somebody with money. She'd said, "Truly, Phil," looking at him in that way, all gentleness, and so sent him off to strive for her till his bones and heart cracked. But that was beauty's right of eminent domain—to throw the squire a rose and so send him off to break his neck for her.

Laceless But Graceful Are Notable New Wedding Gowns

by Corinne Lowe

NEW YORK.—(Special Correspondence.)—If anybody interviewed a wedding gown this present spring, that somebody would be likely to hear a sob story.

"Well, well," one can imagine the ceremonial garb saying, "where do we come in? How, I ask you, is the world going to tell what we really are? Yes, of course, we are white, but then so are many everyday afternoon and evening gowns. As for lace, prithee do not touch upon that gaping wound. Why, do you not know that lace is being done day by day by every upstart frock in the world?"

Who, indeed, would expect the wedding gown to be in any Pollyanna mood? Its plaint is perfectly justifiable, for it does seem as if the veil were all that remained of its old exclusive possessions.

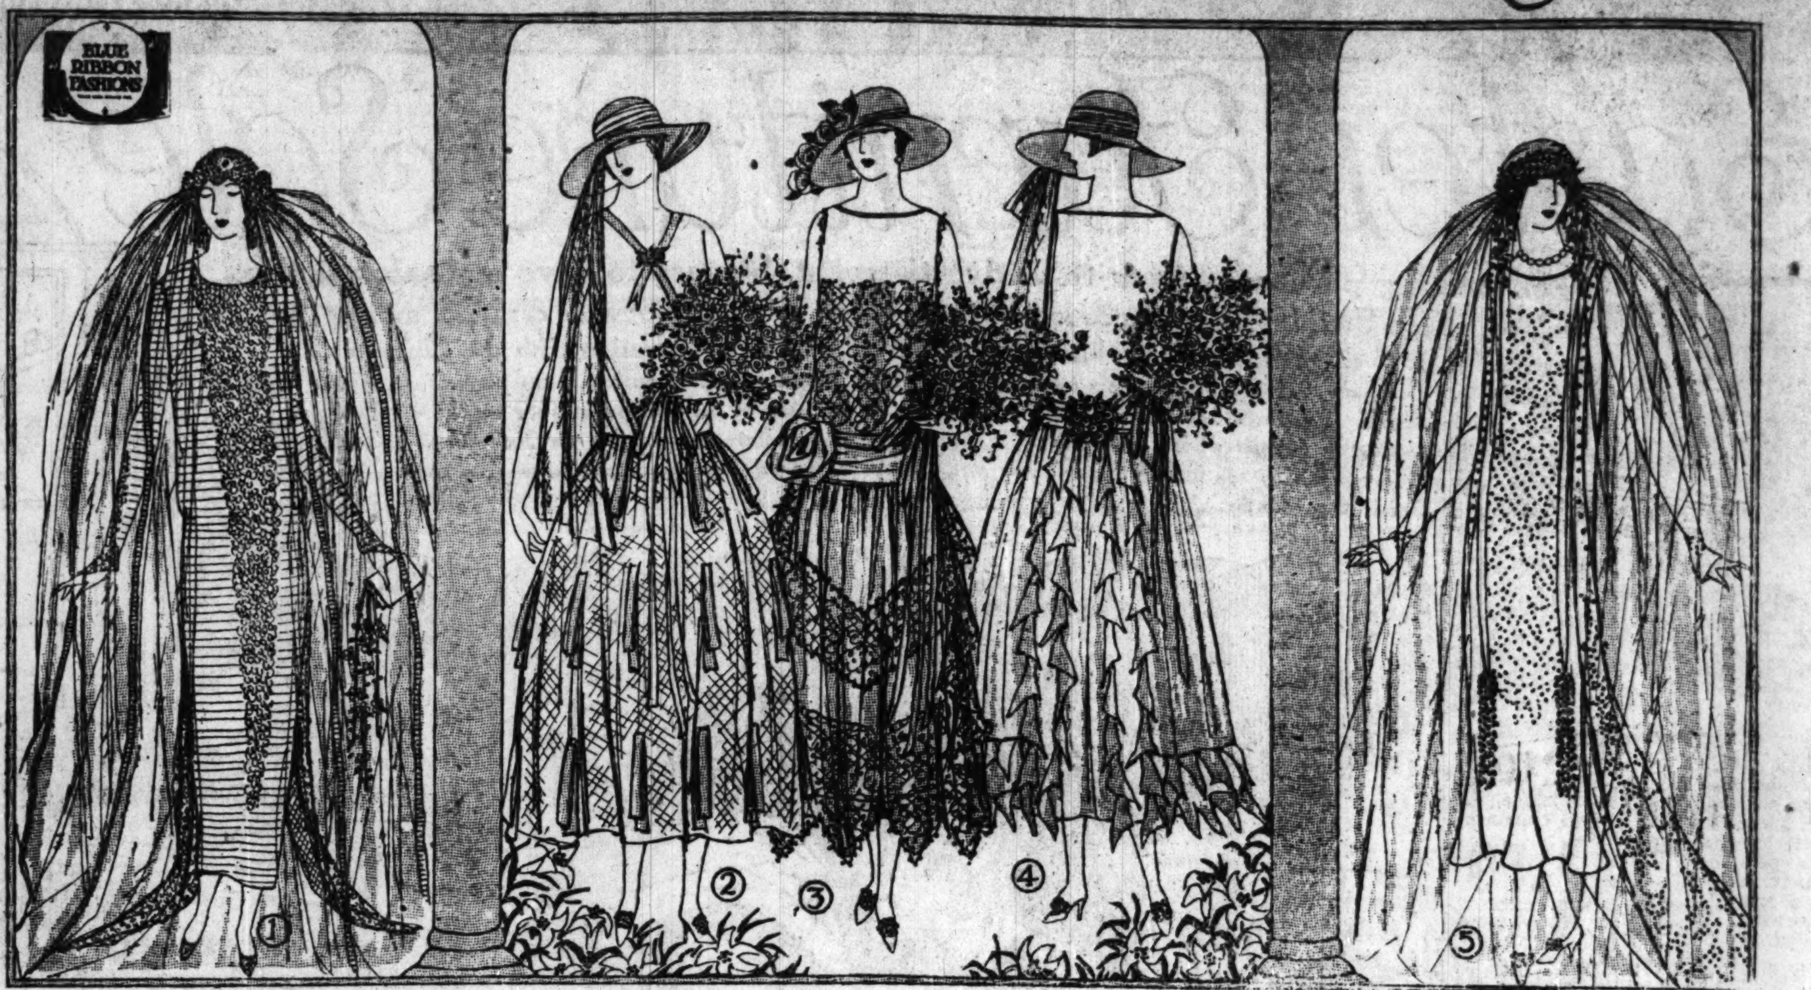
Yet the wedding gown is not without means of retaliation. If other frocks are going to steal its thunder, it can just simply discard thunder. It can say a peal of this never was chic, anyway, and proceed to take up some more exclusive form of inclemency.

This apparently has been its recent attitude to lace. One doesn't mean for an instant that all bridal gowns have given up this feature. On the contrary, the majority are faithful to the old idea that some gorgeous bit of princesse or Venise is an essential of bridal character. Nevertheless, it is a significant fact that a number of the spring's noteworthy models have included not one touch of lace in either gown or veil.

Of course, if any such new standard should be established we tremble for the bride of some twenty-odd years hereafter. She will have to struggle through the ceremony without that heirloom in the family, that piece of old lace worn by her mother, now so dear to the society editor's heart. However, one can't be too much preoccupied with the coming generation's plight to emphasize this present bias to forego lace.

And now for the notable examples of which I have spoken. Before going into any detail regarding these, it is well to remember that our New York designs are often inspired by two sources of fashion. One consists of the bridal gown created by some French dressmaker for a celebrated or fashionable European bride. Another is the stage wedding gown attributed to a famed Parisian atelier. Our designers are prompt to incorporate the suggestions of such glorified mentors and often, indeed, faithful copies of the foreign models appear here in our fashionable shops.

Among the exploited wedding gowns of this season is the one shown at the right of this page. This was designed by Lanvin for the daughter of Rodier, the great fabric wizard of Paris. It is embroidered in a design of fine pearls and of silver, and the workmanship against its background of white crepe Turco is so exquisite that it looks as if this contract had been given out not to mortal craftsmen but to a staff of fairies. Two bands of plain crepe, each punctuated by a tassel of pearls, inclose the embroidered front section. They do more. They mark the beginning of the most sensational feature of this creation. This consists of a loose sleeveless coat which is cut down far under the armholes and which in the back assumes the responsibility for a train.

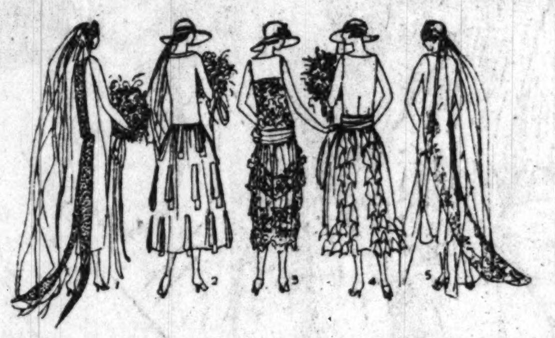


I am going to try hard not to be a partisan about this coat, but I can't help remarking that to me it sums up all the essential dignity and grace of a bridal frock in the most original and arresting way. Furthermore, it possesses a practical value conferred by its detachability. When the great day is over, one can take off this trailing ceremonial garment and leave nothing save the most wearable of white frocks.

The frock itself is a straight, unbelted affair, including one feature that has been sharply stressed in collections of spring imports. This consists of godets at the hem. Even if you cannot be interested in anything else about this model, you must learn to like that flare. It is carried out in many different types of coats and frocks, and several lovely Paris bridal gowns—not including our present subject—have testified to its prestige.

You will see that here is a gown which subscribes absolutely to that new mutinous position on the subject of lace. Not even the veil admits a single touch of princesse or Venise!

Similarly firm in disposition is that other model at the left. This was created for a star of the Viennese stage and, although here we see it after it has undergone some adaptations, all of its salient points are left intact. Another model without one scrap or shred of lace to recommend it! The model manages its stateliness of effect through a lavish use of crystal embroidery upon a sheath frock of white crepe. Almost entirely encrusted with these ornaments is the back panel, subdivided into trains.



ANOTHER VIEW OF TODAY'S FIGURES.

The veil of this frock makes an immediate bid for attention through the use of silver ribbon raying at intervals its voluminous cloud of tulle. A bit theatrical, perhaps! Yet the idea is an exceedingly clever one and carries out the impulse towards a touch of silver which may so often be traced in the spring bridal gown.

There is still another famous model of this season, not illustrated today, which records the fact that a wedding frock may get along perfectly well without lace. This model is a product of Jenny, and for the traditional lace it substitutes white net. This is employed for a crescent shaped yoke and for the deep wrist ruffles of long tight sleeves. But its most original application consists in the ruching of net which borders the square train. The medium of this frock is lustrous white satin.

However, although these three European models bear witness to a tendency, no discredit is cast upon those gowns which retain the old lace prejudice. One remarks in the same breadth, too, that often the gown which abandons lace makes a propitiatory gesture in the veil. This may be either of lace or it may include lace. Thus one effective spring model has a tulle veil which collaborates with a long trailing length of lace.

When lace is used it is not by any means always white. In spite of the fact that nowadays we see so few silver cloth gowns, we are still, so far as wedding raiment is concerned, somewhat inclined to free silver. Silver embroidery is encountered frequently, and there is also quite a bit of prominence given to metallic lace.

There are this spring, just as there have been during the last seasons, two distinct types of wedding gown. The models illustrated today represent, naturally, only a limited idea of the many variations to which the straight line type is susceptible. Aside from the seven-eighths tunic, the narrow frock terminating in flounce or godets and the long unbroken silhouette, there exist many versions of the draped frock. We cling to draperies, in fact, with a fidelity born of the knowledge that nothing else is quite so becoming to certain types of women. Also it is a matter of popular belief that the draped gown is especially suitable to the bride of mature years.

But, as opposed to any demonstration of the straight and narrow theory, here, too, are the period frocks. The creations, with their fitted bodices and their full skirts, often go back exactly sixty years for their motivation. Behold a quaint bodice of satin looking like the stem of that calyx of tulle or lace skirt, and one is puzzled to find any other difference than the absence of crinoline or hoops between the bride of 1856 and her of 1924. Incidentally, one may remark that these period frocks, too, show ability to thrive without the services of lace. Thus I recall one short sleeved satin model completed by a skirt with six or seven scalloped flounces of tulle, each bound in the satin, and characterized by an occasional spray of orange blossoms—these latter applied with such careful carelessness that they looked as if they had been tossed there by some playful breeze.

Yes, they are adorable, these period wedding gowns! But, let me hasten to add, they are adorable only on certain types of brides. If a girl be young and if she also be slim she has nothing to fear from the mid-Victorian frock. Even so, stature enters into one's consideration of suitability. The period gown is not, to my way of thinking, in its most successful mood when worn by either the small or the tall girl. It is at its best with the slim woman of medium height.

The type of frock which takes out a sort of blanket insurance against age or stature is the model at the left. This will give height to the petite or medium sized girl, and it will make the really tall woman appear more than ever a daughter of the gods. In addition, its long lines communicate that air of dignity and stateliness which forms the ideal of the wedding garment. After all, they did those things better in the moyenage and early renaissance than they did in the crinoline era.

This model offers, of course, a suggestion which may preserve its characteristic form through various modifications. With this line always as a guide, one is permitted to make any desirable change. The fabric, instead of being crepe, may be of satin. The beading may be eliminated in favor of a yoke of lace or net repeated on the sleeves and on the train. The train itself could take the long court mold in place of its present bifurcated form. This accessory would look well of all lace and in case net be used for yoke and sleeve ruffles one might be wise in adopting Jenny's idea of the net ruching on its border. It is the long, stately line becoming to slender women of all ages and heights which is the vital point of preservation.

SMILEY

A Smiley-Wiley is a jingle of two lines. Any funny little rhyme that will make folks laugh is a Smiley-Wiley. For instance:

May your path be filled with roses
And your kids have turned up noses.

You can probably write a better one than that. If so, do it and mail it to the Smiley-Wiley Editor, The Tribune, Chicago. The Tribune will pay $10 daily for the best one published, $5 for the next best, $3 for the third, $2 for the fourth, and $1 for each additional one. No manuscripts returned.

NEW YORK—[Special Correspondence.]—One of our most enterprising young sports writers, Paul Gallico, recently created a superathlete, whom he introduced to the world as Sammy. Sammy was a man of many parts. He was fashioned after the romance written around that young student of psychology, named Frankenstein, who robbed the graveyards, the mortuaries, and the dissecting rooms of cadavers and built himself a monster, endowing it with a species of life and motion. Eventually this monster, inhuman in human form, turned upon his creator and slew him.

Gallico robbed Percy Haughton of his brow, Babe Ruth of his eyes and nose, Jack Dempsey of mouth and jaw, Firpo of his mighty right arm, Gene Sarazen of his wrist, Herb Pennock of his left arm, Charlie Paddock of his legs, and Willie Plant of his feet. And there the creature stood not a thing of beauty but of such voluminous strength that his creator, fearing the same fate as Frankenstein, begged for him a companion of such magnanimous pulchritude as to subdue the monster's wrath.

Thus was Samuella created, whose picture is presented today. It is suggested that should a marriage ensue between the superathlete and the super beauty, the world of eugenics may profit immeasurably through a study of their offspring.

We Help Ourselves.

To construct Samuella we robbed the morgue [the room where are kept photographs and news clippings of all who have featured in a newspaper] for the most famous of present day beauties. From one we removed the glorious hair for crowning the beauty. With the help of the artist we quietly removed the nose of another to adorn the center of the face.

We stole the arms while still another beauty was not looking, and having to have something to nail them to, we borrowed the figure of a well known dancer. We had a lot of trouble getting feet to toe in the right direction. It was necessary to amputate several pairs before we could make them fit the direction for which the rest of our Samuella was headed. Each pair had to be equally beautiful.

Whom did we scalp for the occasion? Whose hair would you have chosen?

> What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Shy on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you, and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly The Tribune, Chicago.

Elsie Ferguson's? That's whom we called upon to make the noble sacrifice. We could think of no one else with color and coiffure better fitted to represent the superlative in hair adornment.

Each One Perfect.

It was with no little chagrin, however, we discovered that Pauline Frederick's brow and Irene Bordoni's ears had to be hidden from public gaze—but they are there under Elsie's locks.

Clara Kimball Young's eyes pleaded for a setting from which they might shine more brilliantly than ever. So to her was given the job of illuminating the face.

Dolores' nose knows a perfection that few noses in the world may boast, and so it won the place of distinction upon this face.

For a mouth, whose should be used, we asked ourselves. There are so many beautiful mouths; so many rows of pearly teeth to make mouths fascinating to watch; so many happy, smiling mouths, with infectuous turned up corners. After some deliberation and after all the points of shape, color, of lips, expression, and teeth perfection were given due consideration, Miss Violet Heming's mouth was donated to further Samuella's perfections.

We should like to have been able somehow to incorporate Katherine Cornell's gorgeous voice into the picture. That being impossible, we took the word of a famous sculptor that Irene Castle's figure was as nearly perfect as human figure may be, and proceeded to set it up so that we might give Eva La Gallienne's swan's neck something to take root in. Nita Naldi's perfect hands and arms were then sculped into place. Julia Sanderson's nimble feet and slender ankles were then tacked on so that Samuella in all her borrowed glory might step out to be reviewed.

Without a Soul.

What do you think of her?

Would you call her a prize beauty? With all her borrowed superlatives do you think her as attractive as any single one of the beauties whose dominant feature we robbed for her?

We think her a good lesson in contentment with what you've got. She at least shows the futility of wishing one had Elsie Ferguson's hair, say, unless one is Elsie Ferguson.

We think she shows that nature at her own game doesn't make a bad job of things after all.

We couldn't put a soul into her. Nor could we give her face any expression, both soul and expression being too individual. So there you are. And there is Samuella to prove what every painter, sculptor, art student, beauty judge, and beauty editor has ever contended—that mere perfection of line, feature, and color is not the method of achieving superlative beauty.

Beauty Answers

UNHAPPY: SINCE YOU CANNOT hide with cosmetics or strings of pearls, all you can do with a double chin is rout it, and that the moment that first puffiness introduces itself upon the horizon. The first aid is to see if you are holding your head up or down. Many women are unconscious of the fact that their neck muscles are slumping on the job. It is as easy to sit and stand with the shoulders back and the head erect as it is to let them droop. Even when lying down reading you must watch your chin and keep it off your chest. A chin band is helpful until the muscles are working normally again. You can make one with a five inch bandage, tearing it down the center from both ends, leaving about four inches plain and adjusting the latter under the chin, bringing two ends up to tie on top of the head, the remaining two being tied at the back of the neck. Then send for my exercises, please with s. a. e., and they'll get you back in good chin form before many moons.

LOVE LETTERS

BITTER-SWEET MEMORIES.

DEAR JAY: Spring is here again and the soothing caress of her fragrant breath brings back thoughts of another spring, the memory of which will always be fresh and green. The experience being the first of its kind with me, was and always will be the sweetest in my life.

A little gasp catches my heart and it skips a bit as pictures flash on the screen of my memory—your face with the boyish grin, sometimes tinged with a touch of shyness; the light that shone in your eyes and the sweet seriousness of your expression as you told me, "The feeling I have for you, dear, is almost a holy one."

The ghost of the love now dead and gone in both our hearts still haunts me and raises a barrier between happiness and me; for the love I had for you, the first and sweetest a girl ever gave a man, rises up mutely and gazes at me with reproachful eyes, which somehow remind me of your own eyes, whenever I seriously try to give my word to some one else.

O, Jay, our walks together, our talks together, our plans and everything that happened in those dear months of our betrothal come back one by one. Each one taps at my heart and says, "You don't forget; you can't—let me in." And my heart opens to those memories and excludes what might be the real thing from another. O, bitter sweet memories that take all and give nothing—that make the future barren to preserve the past!

Jay, you said my pride was my greatest fault, but I could not, would not, hold you when you wanted to go, and in the blindness and agony of my heartbreak I saw not the truth. I failed you when you needed me most, even though you wouldn't admit it at the time. It has been a long time, and the traits that once were so dear and the memory of which tug ceaselessly at my heartstrings might now be the means of dispelling my dreams and render me free to say "yes" to another. For whether my dreams or my future are more dear to me I cannot decide, and I cannot have both. One or the other I shall have to banish.

I wonder if you will see this letter and, if you do, can help me to solve my problem?

KAY.

Told by a Divorcee

By Doris Blake.

Woman Who Left Two Husbands Wishes She Had Remained with No. 1

IF they had their lives to lead over, we have wondered how many divorced-and-married-again women would stick to number one in spite of his faults.

Looking back from a second or third matrimonial venture, we have wondered how many women have asked themselves if the adjustments necessary to congenial living with number two or number three would not have served them greater happiness in the long run if applied more patiently to number one.

At a luncheon given recently in New York the conversation turned upon divorce. Some embarrassment was felt at a remark directed at the guest of honor, a woman who had divorced two husbands. One of those deadly pauses ensued when none present seemed capable of a relieving turn of the conversation.

Then the guest of honor spoke up: "You need not be afraid to talk about divorce before me. Strange as it may seem in the light of my having divorced two husbands, I do not believe in divorce.

"Take my own case," she continued. "I ran away from home when I was 18 and married my first husband. I had known him only a few months. All we had in common was youth, the fact that he was the best dancer in the town, wore the nicest neckties, and all the other girls were crazy about him.

She Runs Away.

"My mother was ambitious for me. She had planned my marriage with a man much older, who was rich, prominent socially in both this country and abroad. When I returned from a visit to a small southern town and announced my engagement to Tom, whose forefathers were practically unknown to my family and who occupied a small position with a railway company, my parents simply hit the ceiling, to use an expressive term.

"My mother had hysterics and my father, although usually sympathetic and understanding my impulsive nature, was so inflamed against me that he sternly forbade my communicating with Tom. In vain did I plead, asking them to invite him to visit us that they might see his perfections for themselves.

"The restrictions were not lifted. And a few days found me pouring out my sorrow on paper and getting letters from Tom through a girl friend. I wrote that my parents were preparing to take me to a fashionable watering place in the hope of diverting my mind, and Tom wired back telling me to go to an adjoining town where he had a letter to a clergyman who would marry us. This plan was carried out.

Blames Her Parents.

"To this day I can see that slender girl standing before a small group of witnesses in the early hours of a rainy morning, taking the most solemn vow in life without thought of what it meant, only a feeling of physical attraction to the youth beside her, and an intense feeling of resentment against her parents whom she felt had treated her unjustly.

"No matter what any one says to the contrary, I have always felt that my parents made and broke that match. Had they been patient with me, diplomatic, I might have outgrown the infatuation. Or at least they would not, after I had married him, have made the fatal mistake of ridiculing Tom, which finally led to my seeking a divorce.

"You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear," Father said to me, and the words remained as a standard to judge my husband's every act. For months my mother refused to see him. She demanded that I leave him and go to visit her. There was really nothing against the boy, save that he was pleasure loving, a little lacking in ambition, and had not as good social standing in the community as I did.

Convinced of Her Mistake.

"Things went on for a while quite smoothly. I was unaccustomed to poverty, and his salary was ridiculously small. Then I had a child. Pressed, perhaps, by the new money demands, Tom developed a taste for gambling, staying away from home a great deal, and in time I became convinced I had made a great mistake in marrying him. I lived in a state where divorce was easy to obtain on almost any ground, and my divorce followed. I went back to live with my parents, who felt that as I was still young I would make another match more to their taste.

"I thought when I got rid of Tom I would be gloriously happy, but I was not. I felt lonely. I was constantly open to temptations from every man who took me out, owing to the fact I was a divorced woman; and as time went on the need of companionship drove me to marry a man whom I had known before my first marriage, a man whose social position satisfied my parents, but whose manner of living since I had gone out of his life was unknown to them and to me.

Second Much Worse.

"The second experience was infinitely more horrible than the first. Tom was a piker in gambling, in lack of ambition, in laziness, to Fred. Tom, at least, was kindhearted, at times most lovable. He was incapable in thought even of the cruelty so soon apparent in the makeup of Fred. I had never felt the anguish of jealousy when with Tom, for his devotion to me, as far as it went, eliminated thought of any other woman. Fred was openly flirtatious, and in his oft repeated absences I had occasion to find out his infidelities. My life with Tom had been filled with minor disappointments, with a constant feeling of not being properly placed in life; with the absolute knowledge, quickly learned, that I did not love him in the true and highest sense; with a feeling of impatience at not being able to arouse ambition and initiative in his nature. His happy-go-lucky nature irritated me.

"But that was nothing to what I endured at the hands of Fred. In an hour of great financial distress he left me. I had no difficulty in getting evidence against him which entitled me to a divorce.

"Now, where is the moral of all this disillusion and tragedy? Simply this, from my point of view: I am now in middle life. My child has married; has a home, interests of her own to follow. She is a good child, but of necessity her life must run in channels different from mine. I live in a hotel; have my own friends, my own interests. But am I happy? I have friends who are congenial. And, while I take an interest in many activities, there are distinctly lonely values in my life which make me know that freedom is not all.

Deprived of Faith.

"When I examine myself today I know and feel that, with patience and a more self-sacrificing spirit on my part, I might have worked out a happy life with my first husband.

"That is why I am against divorce. I think it is simply jumping from the frying pan into the fire in nine cases out of ten. It certainly was in my case. I am not the sort of woman who can lead a frivolous life. I cannot console myself as some women—women of my age—do with lounge lizards; nor would my pride allow me to do so, even if I had the inclination. By that second experience—not by my first—I have deprived myself of what faith I may have had in men.

"In retrospect I have honestly come to the conclusion that my life would not have been a failure if divorce had been more difficult and I had been forced to work out my own salvation with my first husband."

RIGHT AFTER A SEVERE ILLNESS

McCoy's Cod Liver Oil Tablets Help You Gain Strength and Put on Needed Weight—Great

Nothing like the vitamines in Cod Liver Oil to help convalescing people to quickly get strong and well—everybody knows that.

But nobody wants to take the ill-smelling, horrible tasting stomach upsetting oil itself, so nowadays up to date medical men are ordering a tablet of Cod Liver Oil and it surely does do the work.

Ask Buck & Rayner, Public Drug Co., Walgreen Co., MacLean Drug Co., The Boston Store, or any regular druggist for a box of McCoy's Cod Liver Oil Tablets. They are sugar coated and as pleasant to take as candy.

Skinny men and women take them to speedily put on plenty of good, healthy flesh and for this purpose they are so extremely good that thin men and women often take on five pounds or over in 30 days. As a matter of fact, your druggist will return your money if you don't take on five pounds in 30 days.

Great for weak, run-down children, too, and gives them a hearty appetite—60 tablets, 60 cents.

Doris Blake's Answers TO LOVE PROBLEMS

Have you a perplexing love affair on which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Tribune, Chicago. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped, addressed envelope.

A Bit Unreasonable.

"Dear Miss Blake: I wonder if you could help me. I have been going with a boy friend for quite a while, and I care a great deal for him, but I have been home ill for two days and he hasn't called and when I called him he refused to come and see me on the flimsy excuse that he had to attend evening school. Now, that would be all right if I didn't know he stays away from school to go to parties or work on his radio. If he doesn't care enough to come and see me when I am ill, is he worth bothering about? WONDERING."

Aren't you just a little bit of a tyrant, child? The boy might be embarrassed to death coming to see you when you were ill. I think the average youth would rather miss night school to go to a party or work on his radio to spending it with an invalid, sick only two days and expecting the world to commiserate with her. Frankly, now, don't you think you are unreasonable? I do.

Humor Out of Place.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a steady reader of your column. I am a boy of 20 and love a girl one year younger. I have told her of my love, but she seems to take it as a joke. I love her and can't give her up. Please help me, Miss Blake. I have no mother or father to advise me, so I thought you could. DANA."

Verily, a sense of humor is a deadly thing to combat where your heart is at stake, is it not, Dana? Nothing in the world is more disconcerting to an honest intention. What, though, if she really does not return the feeling? That may be her way of turning you down without hurting your feelings. Why not have a showdown with her? Might as well be hurt by a serious face as a merry one.

Better Be Sure.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am 27 and am engaged to a young man three and a half years my junior. Do you think he is too young for me or, I might put it, am I too old for him? "L. E. A."

I don't think a disparity of three and one-half years anything to worry about, if you both are in love. But the question is whether a boy of 23 is mature enough to know his mind for permanent decision. You want to be pretty sure that later he will not be able to say: "Well, I was only a kid and didn't know any better." Some men of 23 are quite mature for their years and others as babyish about their infatuations as their college freshmen brothers.

WORDLINGS

HAVE you tried to see how many words you can spell with the letters in your last name? It's great fun, besides being profitable, because every Sunday THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE awards ten $1 prizes to the ten persons who can spell the greatest number of words with the letters in their family name.

Note the rules carefully. Do not use the same letter twice in the same word if that letter appears only once in your name. Another thing to avoid is obsolete words. Use only those which are to be found in the English dictionary.

After your list is finished, check it to be sure you have not used the same word twice.

Any list which shows violation of any of the rules will be disqualified

The following ten persons are this week's prize winners:

Matt Vanderbloemen, 120 East McWilliam street, Fond du Lac, Wis.; 371 words.

Mrs. Laura Dachsteiner, 2128 9th street, Peru, Ill.; 323 words.

Mrs. Grace Rittenhouse, 3120 Marion avenue, Mattoon, Ill.; 287 words.

E. M. Northenscold, 397 W. Division street, Fond du Lac, Wis.; 281 words.

Dorcas Strawbridge, Ashton, Ill.; 261 words.

Edna Mae Westmoreland, Box 12, R. F. D. 3, Saybrook, Ill.; 257 words.

Mrs. George Ermatinger, 819 Sheridan road, Chicago; 246 words.

E. T. Cartlidge, 1133 Western avenue, Topeka, Kas.; 246 words.

Lois Waterhouse, 6752 East End avenue, Chicago; 245 words.

E. Espointour, Box 146, Morton Grove, Ill.; 236 words.

How many words can you spell with the letters of your last name? It sounds interesting, doesn't it? Have you ever tried it? Perhaps you have, just for the fun of it. Or perhaps you've played the game because of its educational value.

It's simple. For example, take the name LEVINS. With the letters in that name you form the following words:

SNIVEL	LINE
EVIL	LIE
VISE	LIES
VINE

THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE is going to give you a chance in its new Wordling contest to enjoy the same recreation, and pay you for it.

One dollar will be paid to each person whose list of English words, made up of the letters of his—or her—last name, is printed in The Tribune. The lists will be chosen, first, with reference to the number of words; second, with reference to the value of the words. For instance, a word of two syllables, such as "snivel," in the list above, will count more than a word of one syllable, such as "lie."

Here are the rules. Read them carefully.

Be sure to use your last name.

At the top of your WORDLINGS mention the number of words you have been able to spell with the letters in your last name.

Write your WORDLINGS in column effect—for example:

SMITH	COHEN	JONES
Tim	Hen	One
This	Hone	Son
Him	Cone	Joe

Address your WORDLINGS to Wordling Editor, THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE, Chicago. No manuscripts returned.

EVERYTHING POINTS TO A FANCY SHIRT YEAR.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Next to his collection of neckties, the thing a man points to with pride in his wardrobe is his collection of shirts, unless he is of the white shirt school, in which case he is behind the times. For the white shirt habit is being discouraged these days by the manufacturers of shirts, who are making fancy shirts in such attractive colorings that it is hard to resist them, and by the large laundry bill which one man can accomplish with the use of white shirts exclusively.

In days gone by the average citizen would frequently succumb to the blandishments of some particular striped or colored shirt, and, bringing it home, would trot the entire family in to look at the beauty. With the popularity of the white shirt there was less incentive to buy shirts, as one was pretty much like the other, being divided into two classes—those that fitted and those that didn't, or those that were almost new and those that were a little worn. If one had a shirt for every day in the week, with just enough extra ones to go the rounds until the laundry came home, a shirt wardrobe was complete.

Today, with the influx of the fancy shirt, a shirt wardrobe is never complete. For there is always the chance that a shirt with quite a different stripe from what one has may be seen in the local haberdasher's window, and so desired, or there may be a new suit recently acquired which is of a color that cannot be attractively harmonized with the shirts already in the collection, but which takes a shirt treatment all its own. And so one keeps adding a shirt here and there, and with a couple of dozen or more is prepared to battle with any color combination problem that comes up.

There is no getting away from the fact that this year points to a fancy shirt year, not only in the highest class merchandise, but in the more popular stuff as well. At any season of any year you can go into an expensive and exclusive custom shirt maker's and find men picking out fancy silk striped or figured silk, cotton, or linen shirts.

Such men have always had a variety of fancy shirts in their wardrobe, and always will, no matter how fancy become the shirts of the rest of the male population. For no matter how nearly the shirts of the latter approach in appearance the shirts of that exclusive set of men whose sartorial concern it is to keep at least one jump ahead of their less exclusive brothers, they can always do so by means of exclusive patterns or finer qualities. They do not find it necessary to take to white shirts, because the popular priced shirts are coming forth from the factories in the colorings and general style for which they are responsible. By some little trick of collar arrangement or plaited bosom, they manage to keep different.

We find, then, fancy shirts making a strong comeback. Even the silk shirt, that was temporarily put out of business during the war because of its general adoption, is finding its niche in society again. In fact, the plain white shirt has taken its place as a badge of fortunes made over night.

Not that this will kill the white shirt as it did the fancy silk, for the white shirt is a staple article and will always be in demand.

With the object of finding out just what is being offered to the public in the way of fancy shirts at popular prices, we visited one of the most prominent manufacturers in this line. We found him turning out striped shirts with collars to match by the thousands.

He was full of fancy shirt enthusiasm. The blue background shirt with white stripes, and a stiff collar to match, is the shirt that is making the most sales among the popular priced fancy shirts. But every other conceivable color scheme is used in the shirts turned out by this concern as well as every material used in the present day shirt trade.

Crepe de Chine, broadcloth, jerseys shantung, madras, fiber striped madras, woven madras, percale, pique jacquards, mercerized, pongee, oxford, poplin, satin stripes, woven silk stripes are used.

Did you ever stop to think about the difference between all these materials? Percale, pique, madras, for instance, are all cotton at heart. But when the cotton thread is finished in each case the result is quite different.

Percale always has a printed design. Pique has a ribbed effect. In woven madras the stripe or pattern is woven in the goods, in fiber striped madras the stripe is of fiber silk. A jacquard material contains a figure that is woven in and of the same color as the rest of the goods.

A New Way to Tell Your Fortune

BY NAPOLEON'S BOOK OF FATE

DO you belong to the sign of odd, even, and three odds? Would you like to know your own sign or class? Consult the Scroll of Man's Fate, as the great Napoleon did in every crisis. We are publishing his "Book of Fate" serially, two grand questions of life and their answers each Sunday.

By following the directions you can ask the questions and obtain the answers meant for you. The method is simple. You will find working it out a fascinating game.

Twenty-ninth Grand Question of Life.

What Is the Aspect of the Seasons and What Political Changes Are Likely to Take Place?

HOW TO GET YOUR OWN ANSWER.

Fix in your mind the question, to the exclusion of all other things. Then, thinking of it alone, with pen or pencil, set down five rows of upright or inclined lines in the following manner, taking care, but not consciously so, that each row contains more than twelve such lines, in respect of the number of the signs of the zodiac.

| | | | | | | | | | | | | |

That is, you must not count the lines in each row as you make them, but you must abstractedly guide pen or pencil across the paper, so that the number of lines in each of the five rows, while more than twelve, shall be entirely without design so far as you yourself are consciously aware.

Having thus set down the five rows, you then count the lines in each row, to learn whether the number is odd or even.

Perhaps the count will show the first line to be odd, the second and third even, the fourth odd, the fifth even; you then belong to the sign of odd, two even, odd and even.

But no matter what your five lines show as to odd or even, beginning with the first line and going down, there is an answer to the grand question of life that is meant especially for you.

You will find the answer you seek under the sign of your particular combination of lines of odd and even.

THE ORACLE'S ANSWERS.

Even, Odd, Even, Two Odd: "The air which has long been filled with the sighs of oppression will soon resound to the shouts of liberty!"

Four Even, Odd: "The deluder of his people will be caught in the meshes of the cunningly devised net which he himself hath woven."

Even, Odd, Three Even: "Ignorance and oppression, like a thick mist on the mountain top, will be gradually dispersed as the sun of knowledge enlightens the understandings of men."

Two Even, Odd, Two Even: "Shouts of 'Freedom!' will resound throughout the halls which once were filled with the sighs and groans of despair."

Three Even, Odd, Even: "A vast empire in the west will burst the chains which fetter it."

Thirtieth Grand Question of Life.

Two Even, Three Odd: "A friend will procure his speedy release."

Odd, Two Even, Two Odd: "The prisoner will soon be welcomed home, although he now smarts under the power of his enemies."

Two Odd, Two Even, Odd: "With much difficulty he will obtain a discharge from prison."

Three Odd, Two Even: "The prisoner will find much difficulty in obtaining pardon."

Two Odd, Even, Odd, Even: "Once more will the captive breathe the air of freedom."

Odd, Even, Odd, Even, Odd: "If much exertion is used he will obtain his liberty."

Even, Odd, Even, Two Odd: "The prisoner's release is uncertain; let some kinsman interest himself in his behalf."

Odd, Even, Two Odd, Even: "Enlargement for the unfortunate captive!"

Even, Two Odd, Even, Odd: "After long imprisonment he will be released."

EASTER EGGS.

ALL through lent, in former times, no good Christian dared to eat an egg, and this denial made the egg all the more a coveted dainty on Easter day; therefore, eggs were served in every style at table, and made a prominent token of the day and the next day, too, in many ways. The ancient view of the breaking of the egg as a symbol of resurrection can be found today if we look for it in matters pertaining to Easter.

In un-Catholic countries, like old New England, the egg began to enter the diet in spring time to a great extent, because at this season hens do their best work as egg producers. Eggs make a far more reasonable luncheon dish than a breakfast eatable, and in the most conventional and best egg cooking of the world—that of France—the most conventional of all central eatables for a luncheon is the omelet.

It Requires Skill.

Egg cookery is simple, so, like other cookery of the same sort, it requires the highest skill, and that skill is in part in the head in the shape of a knowledge of what heat does to the food stuff called protein, which years ago was called albumin, and which is so spoken of today when the protein mentioned is that of the white of an egg.

Some persons, I am sure, never learn to cook an egg because they have never had an egg perfectly cooked. The slatternly egg cookery one may see as one travels about is colossal in amount, but then again one may see a perfectly cooked egg in those tiny little silver lined copper casseroles—just big enough for one egg—with sweet herbs seasonings and a sauce which is representative of the highest type of cookery. One of a dozen fine eggs perhaps goes that way; the others are prepared so as to be neither attractive to the eye nor capable of yielding half the return to the body that an egg properly treated should.

Experiments in Boiling.

Any one who is really interested in egg cookery in a fundamental way, not in the mere recipe way, can perhaps pick up a copy of that rather old book, "The Chemistry of Cooking," by W. Mattieu Williams. In the chapter on the cooking of albumin there is a description of some wonderfully interesting experiments in the boiling of eggs as well as in the cooking of other albumins. Prof. Williams was perhaps the first person to give the scientific reasons for cooking an egg considerably short of the boiling point. He showed that the white of an egg would commence to cook at a temperature of 134 degrees Fahrenheit, and may be completely coagulated at 160 degrees. The cooking schools now cook eggs thus slowly. Prof. Williams invited every one to try cooking eggs in this way and then to compare them with eggs cooked in water at a boiling temperature or at 212 degrees.

Of the white he said, when it was cooked in the latter fashion: "It will dry, shrink, and become horny. If the heat is carried a little farther it will become converted into a substance which is so hard and tough that a valuable cement is obtained by simply smearing the edges of the article to be cemented with the white of an egg and then heating it a little above 212 degrees."

Cooked in Shell.

In fancy cookery the egg lends itself to many manipulations, but a hard boiled egg does not mean an egg that has been boiled hard, but simply one that has been cooked in water until firm. One way is to put the eggs over the fire in cold water, and allow twenty minutes for that water to come to a boil, when the egg will be cooked firm enough to hold its shape when the shell is removed. This egg is safely and sanely cooked. When a great many eggs are put into boiling water, they lower the temperature so much that they will be correctly cooked merely by standing in the water which is not again raised to the boiling point—for about ten minutes.

Steamed Eggs.

Many sorts of egg dishes are more safely cooked in steam than in any other way. All the sorts called shirred or en cocotte; that is, in individual dishes, may be cooked in this fashion. Butter the dishes, put in the eggs with their accompaniment of a sauce or cream and seasonings, then set the dishes in two or three inches of boiling water in a shallow pan. Cover the pan and put it in a hot oven or directly over the fire for from three to ten minutes, according to the thickness of the dish.

Time can be saved by heating the dishes before the eggs are put in and probably a bit of flavor is saved in this way as well. Plain eggs in this fashion are superior in many cases to those poached, since they may be served in the hot dish while the trimming and preparing of a poached egg for service allows time for it to cool.

Fried Eggs.

A hot iron pan is likely to be twice as hot, by degrees, as boiling water. If boiling water is so hot as to ruin an egg for digestive purposes, how much more will it be ruined if cooked in a truly hot pan? Its brown bony edges show readily enough why part of it is undigestible. The rest from a digestive standpoint is little better. Since butter burns at a lower temperature than other fats it is the best fat in which to fry eggs but ham, bacon, and salt pork fats give fried eggs what is the more widely acceptable flavor, and are as safe as the butter in the hands of the intelligent cook.

Two tablespoons of fat for a frying pan of eggs is a good measure. Heat the fat short of any point where it makes a noise and not anywhere near to the smoking point. Drop in the eggs, fold over the edges of the whites which instantly set, and cook the eggs gently over an exceedingly slow fire, basting them with the hot fat to hasten the cooking and perfect the seasoning. It is better to season the fat before the eggs are put in the pan, but bacon, ham and pork fats need no seasoning.

If the fat is too hot when the egg is dropped into it there will be a great popping because the part that hits the fat is 85 per cent water, and water begins to turn to steam at a temperature of 212 degrees. It does so with a more or less violent pop when it hits anything a hundred degrees or more higher than that.

Scrambled Eggs.

It takes something of a genius to fry eggs to all sorts of perfection of appearance and edibility. It is considerably easier to cook scrambled eggs well because we give them constant attention, stirring them all the time. But we may half ruin them even so. If they are overcooked water oozes from them, or they curdle. Correctly cooked they are a creamy, moist mass. This moistness is what makes them susually pleasanter than the omelet which is too often dry, much too dry, because too much heat has driven all the moisture out of the egg and hardened the texture.

One way to scramble eggs is: To each egg add a tablespoon of milk or cream and beat up slightly. It is best to have both eggs and milk cold. Have a little butter in the frying pan just hot enough to sizzle, but not to brown before the eggs are put in. Pour in the egg, and stir continuously until it is a creamy mass which will flow slightly when it is poured over toast. There will be no need to lower the fire if the butter in the pan has been sizzling long enough to show that it will not brown at that temperature. Here is cooking to a point, and when that point is reached stop abruptly.

The scrambled egg should be neither dry nor horny nor too wet. It takes hardly more than a minute to scramble a few eggs.

Seasonings for Shirred Eggs.

Shirred eggs are seasoned with sauces and pastes of many dainty sorts, and lend themselves to this type of seasoning better than eggs cooked any other way. A seasoning of pimento and cream makes an ornate preparation. At Easter time asparagus tips and other fresh bits of green are often added to the white sauce in which eggs are shirred to make a dish suggestive of the season. Even lettuce cooked and made into a paste makes an excellent bed for shirred eggs. Or the little dish may be buttered and lined with spinach before the egg is put in.

BLUE BELL CANON
20 MINUTES WALK FROM CITY

Combine Recreation, Health and Study in Your Vacation

Boulder, Colorado, has many attractions not duplicated anywhere in the world—approved courses of summer study (collegiate or preparatory); diversified recreation for young and old; sanatoriums and mountain retreats for those who desire rest.

For Study—Attend the Summer School Sessions of Colorado University (fifth largest in the U. S.); register for the Chautauqua courses; or study in the preparatory schools.

For Recreation—Hike among the quaking aspens or the conifers in the foothills (just a few minutes' walk from the city); motor on boulevard roads along dashing mountain streams and thru rock-walled canons flanked with spruce and pine forests; or, with the more adventurous, scale the barren peaks above the clouds and tramp across Colorado's living, moving glaciers.

For those who desire the quiet and rest of the hills, mountain cabins at low cost are available; most camp sites are free—choose them where you will—pure, cold, crystal streams from the glaciers are almost everywhere.

A trip abroad—is a trip abroad; but a visit to Switzerland is an experience of immeasurable joy and lifelong memory. To visit Europe without going to Switzerland, is like owning a beautiful setting without the diamond. Incomparable scenery; invigorating, rejuvenating climate; endless sports; superior railroad, steamship and motor service; splendid hotels and pensions; and a friendly hospitality, all combine to please and satisfy Americans—at her many famous resorts:—

GENEVA:—with its classical lake, ever attractive and interesting as a resting place, combines beauty, wealth and intellect. Excursions to Mont Blanc region. Golf.

MARTIGNY:—starting point of the Martigny-Chamonix Railway, leading through a picturesque and romantic alpine district facing the Mont Blanc range rising above Chamonix.

GSTAAD and KANDERSTEG:—picturesque mountain villages in the Bernese Oberland, served by the international electric Loetschberg-Simplon line, ideal health resorts.

INTERLAKEN:—the garden spot of the Bernese Oberland. Golf. Here the Jungfrau Railway carries you to the Top of the World. Nearby beckon the lovely resorts of Grindelwald and Wengen.

ZERMATT:—easily reached via the electric Loetschberg Railway and Visp—basking at the foot of the "Matterhorn". Excursion by rail to the Gornergrat, offering one of the grandest panoramas in the world.

LAUSANNE-OUCHY:—chief point on the Simplon line, facing the Savoy Alps. Convenient headquarters for excursions in all directions. Educational center. Golf.

MONTREUX-TERRITET-GLION:—Byron's country, with Lake Leman beautiful as a dream. Excursions to the Castle of Chillon, into the Gruyere Valley, and Rochers-de-Naye. Golf.

LUGANO:—in the Swiss-Italian lake district, a floral paradise, basking in perennial sunshine. Golf. Then, via the electrified St. Gothard line, to—

LUCERNE:—its loveliness proverbial, its variety of sports and amusements most interesting. Golf. Excursion center of Central Switzerland.

ZURICH:—the country's metropolis, at the portals of the Alps—known as "Athens on the Limmat." Golf.

The GRISONS, with its 150 valleys, an alpine wonderland, where an invigorating climate, curative springs and sport advantages have made world-famous its St. Moritz, Pontresina, Davos and other resorts. Golf.

The Sweden of yesterday is still seen in the many ruins, memorials, and runestones, and the national costumes of the peasants. And always there are the eternally snow-capped mountains, majestic waterfalls, and thousands of lakes.

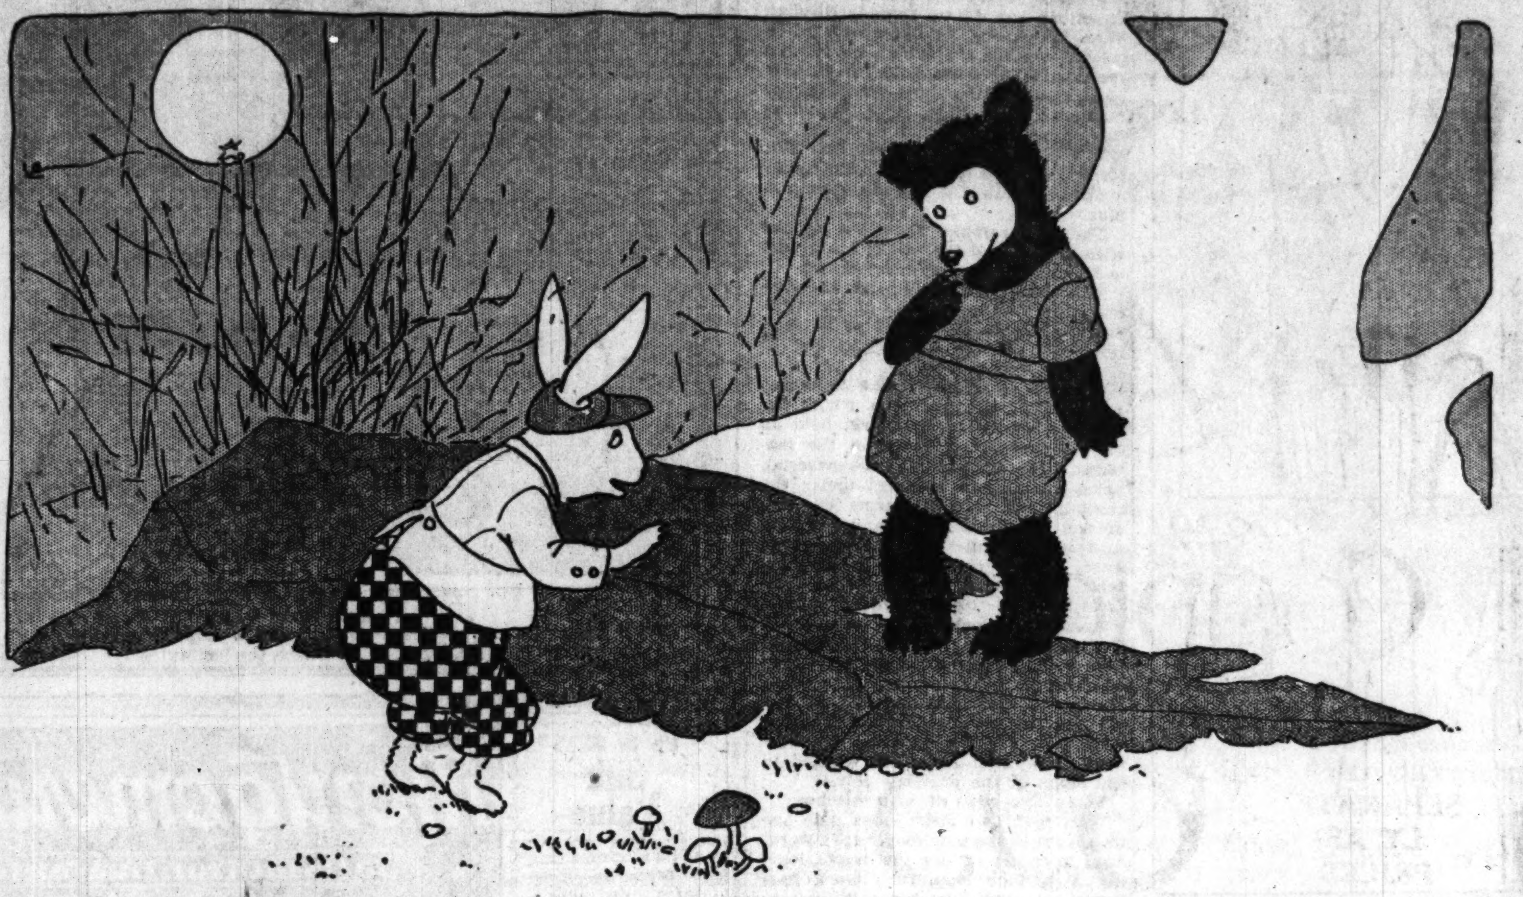
THE ADVENTURES OF FUZZY WUZZY



FUZZY WUZZY MEETS THE FUNNY BUNNY.

By Raymond Kelly.

"MY, but I'm a cross bear today," growled little Fuzzy Wuzzy to himself as he came out of the den. "It's no use trying to help folks, 'cause I just get myself scolded. Mother said she wished our clock had a sweet tone like Granny Grizzly's, but when I poured molasses into it to make it that way she got just awfully cross. How was I to know it would make the old thing stop? It was good molasses, because I ate what ran over. No wonder I'm a bear. I have to bear enough."

But Fuzzy Wuzzy never worries about anything long. You see, a mountain is such an interesting place that one doesn't have time for worry. Daddy'd bring you home a mountain if they weren't so expensive and so hard to move. Besides, one would be too big for us to keep in our back yard. But you can play your sand pile is a mountain if you want to, and that will do pretty well.

Anyhow, Fuzzy Wuzzy quit sniffling and went to sniffing and, sure enough, he smelled something interesting right away. Then he listened, and what he heard was as interesting as its smell. So he looked, and what he saw was as interesting as it sounded. It was a rabbit; not just a common ordinary pet one, but a special sort of rabbit, for it had black and white checkered trousers and a red coat. It had a red cap, too, and the cap had holes cut in it for the bunny's ears. He walked upright, too, just as you do except when you're playing marbles.

"Good morning, rabbit," said Fuzzy Wuzzy politely. "Are you good to eat?"

"Well, I could hardly say as to that, never having tried it," answered the rabbit, "but I'd not have time for it, even if I were hungry enough, which I'm not... You see, I'm busy at Easter time hiding eggs for little girls and bears and boys to find on Monday morning. I've just hidden yours, and I want you to be a good little bear, and not hunt for them ahead of time. That's naughty, you know. You'll promise me that you'll wait, won't you, Fuzzy?"

"Yes, Mr. Rabbit," answered Fuzzy Wuzzy, "but how did you know my name?"

"Because," said the rabbit, taking off his funny little cap and dancing a funny little jig:

I'm the Funny Bunny,
I know most everything.
I show the bees the honey,
And teach the birds to sing.
In my little red balloon
I'll go sailing to the moon,
And I'll send a postal,
Yes, a pretty postal,
Back to you—

Then, for the first time, Fuzzy Wuzzy noticed the little red balloon that was tied to the southeast corner of the blackberry bush. He started toward it, but, before he could get there, the Funny Bunny had hopped into the basket, and was sailing away over the treetops on his way back to the moon, where he lives between times.

Lester was taken by his mother to an all day meeting of the Ladies' aid.

He got through the morning hours fairly well, but along at 3 in the afternoon the buzz of fifty voices had racked his nerves, for he said: "Mother, let's go where womans ain't."

Jennie lived in a flat all her short life until about a month ago, when her family moved into a house.

Jennie was so delighted with the place that she wrote the following to her aunt: "Dear Auntie: We have moved into a lovely yard, which has a house in it."

M. O.

A Canadian boy was taken by his mother to a doctor for a physical examination. The question of diet arose.

"I can't get fresh eggs here," the mother said.

Harold spoke up: "At home I have home made eggs from real chickens."

E. L. M.

Twins arrived next door, and when Ardith overheard her mother say that the family would now have their hands full, she contributed this piece of philosophy about the situation: "I don't see why it will be more trouble to grow two than one."

J. O.

George and Dick were boasting of their physical prowess and then started to prove it.

"It must be your nature to fight," said George, getting the worst of a scuffle.

"I guess so," replied Dick. "All my folks are natures."

How to Use the Patterns

FLANNEL dresses are popular now and will be all summer. There are many cool days when a material with some warmth is needed, and pattern No. 1,926 will be a good one to use—choosing checked, striped, or plain flannel. Many of these flannels have a tan ground with a narrow brown line forming a check, and on the wrong side the material is a solid color—probably brown. Where the check line doesn't show through, the wrong side of this material is good for facings, bands, and other trimmings.

In this design the waist and skirt are cut separately and joined. The waist has the usual plain, one piece back, and in the front the right laps over the left front, closing on the left side. The one piece sleeves may be made long and gathered into a band or finished at a three-quarter length.

The skirt is in one piece, gathered at the waist line. It laps evenly with the waist, and if checked flannel is used, the wrong [brown] side may be used for a band down the right front edge of the skirt where it laps and closes, and the collar and top of the little vest finished in the same way. If the sleeve edges are set into narrow bands, these should also be made of the brown. The belt will look well made of the checked or plain side of the material, or the checked side could be used and narrow bands of the plain set on to finish both edges. Challis is a pretty material for a dress of this kind—one to be worn at home afternoons—and it also has a little warmth. This design is equally good for wash materials—mercerized poplin, English broadcloth, linen, pongee, tub silks, or gingham. Then, too, it will be pretty made of two materials or rather a plain and figured material. The figured or plaid part could be used for the skirt and for sleeve edges, collar, etc., and the plain for the main part of the waist and the band down the closing edge of the skirt.

Pattern No. 1949 is for a blouse that seems to be particularly well adapted to wear with a tailored suit.

Silk alpaca would make a beautiful blouse, so would satin crepe, silk broadcloth, printed crêpe, or flannel.

The long roll collar is prettily shaped at the end where the blouse fastens, and this could be made of something contrasting with the body of the blouse. The long sleeves are made close fitting by means of a dart that goes up the outside from the wrist to just below the elbow. The correct finish for a suit blouse of this kind will be a close fitting cuff.

Perforations on the pattern provide for rather short sleeves, if one prefers, and these should be finished with turned back cuffs. Detachable cuffs may be made of a fine white pique—using this for the small inset vest also. Hold the front of the pattern up to yourself before cutting, to see whether it will be long enough, and measure the sleeve length also. In the same bust measure, quite a variety of arm lengths are apt to be found on different women, and it is always safe to compare all principal measurements before pinning on the material to cut.

Pattern No. 1905 is a particularly pretty design for an apron, and when one is dressed for the afternoon and has to go into the kitchen to prepare dinner, an apron made by this pattern will be attractive and easy to slip on and off.

Black sateen may be used for the apron, the tops of the pockets and all other edges being bound with a contrasting color. Then, too, some one of the figured or checked ginghams, percales, or chambrays will be lovely, using something contrasting for a finish.

This pattern is in four pieces—front, back, pocket, and pocket band. The front and back join on the shoulders and for a short distance at the bottom of the back and top of the back of the front of apron. The back laps may be finished with buttons and buttonholes just like a regular waist.

Women the World Over

In Sweden a wife's services in the home have a legal value.

Mrs. E. Palmer is a successful wheelwright in Hammersmith, England.

Mason O. Smedley, sheriff of Queens county, New York, has twenty women deputies.

Miss Veronica Sullivan acts in the capacity of matchmaker for a Lowell, Mass., boxing club.

Despite the fact that she was left $4,000,000 by her father, Miss Nellie Kouns has elected to go on the concert stage as a soprano.

Miss Gladys Moore, an 18 year old Kentucky girl, is training to work for her father as a jockey.

Mrs. Dorothy Dozier, 18, is known as California's flapper bootblack, she having recently set herself up in business in San Diego.

In practically every line of business in Denmark women enjoy the same pay and equal opportunities with the men.

Mrs. Edwin P. Morrow, wife of the newest member of the United States railroad labor board, is employed in her husband's office as a filing clerk.

DR. CALDWELL'S
SYRUP PEPSIN
Keeps young girls fit

False Modesty Wrecks Health

THE young lady just assuming the responsibilities of a woman is very apt to be self-conscious of her physical functions, and in consequence neglect them. There is no time, however, when it is more important for her to look after them. Chief among her troubles is constipation, and her suffering will be serious when she gets older if she does not regulate her bowels now. Mrs. Mary Kellar of 132 Benton St., Sisterville, W. Va., was perplexed about her daughter until her own druggist told her they used Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at his house, and she did likewise. Miss Irene Mazierska of 90 Peter St., Buffalo, N. Y., is glad her attention was called to Syrup Pepsin.

Safe for Young and Old

Let mothers with growing daughters interest themselves in this matter and see that their judgment is enforced. A rule followed by many is to take a spoonful of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin once a week until the bowels function daily, and at such other times as there is headache, biliousness, sores and fever blisters, lack of energy and appetite, sleeplessness, indigestion.

A dose can be given in these conditions to any member of the family however young or old as Syrup Pepsin is a simple compound of Egyptian senna with pepsin and pleasing aromatics, and perfectly safe.

Public Recognizes Merit

You will quickly see the difference between a mild laxative like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and castor oil, or rough cathartics and physics. Syrup Pepsin acts gently and does not gripe. Increased doses are not necessary. A bottle can be had at any drug store, and a spoonful costs less than a cent. It has been successfully used for thirty years and is the largest selling liquid laxative in the world, over 10 million bottles having been sold in drug stores last year. Keep Syrup Pepsin in your medicine chest.

PRACTICAL AND FANCY NEEDLEWORK

BY CLOTILDE

NEW COLLARS AND CUFFS.

PONGEE silk is used for this pretty collar and cuffs set. Three-eighths of a yard of 36 inch silk will make the set, and three skeins of mercerized floss—blue, yellow and green—will be required for the work.

Probably every one who reads these directions has drawn threads through linen in making handkerchiefs. The colored threads are drawn in this set the same way. First draw two threads of silk, attach the third thread to the center of the colored strand; pick up the thread at the opposite side of the silk, and pull through carefully. The stripes are one inch apart, the center stripe in yellow, the two outer ones in blue.

The little rambler roses are worked with yellow, and the leaves are green, worked in the loop or daisy stitch.

The collar and cuffs with the crocheted edging are made of handkerchief linen—⅜ of a yard of 36 inch linen being required and one ball of No. 50 crochet cotton.

This edging is done in the Armenian needlepoint, directions for which follow: To commence the work, hold an end of the thread down on the material, insert the needle in the material, point away from you and under the thread, take thread nearest the eye of the needle, and place under and over needle, pull through and tighten knot. Insert the needle in the material about one quarter of an inch from the last stitch, having the thread nearest the work over the needle. Take the thread nearest the eye of the needle, place under and over needle, pull through and tighten. This forms the Armenian loop. Continue for the desired length, taking great care to keep the loops even. All succeeding rows of loops are worked in the loops of the previous row.

Work five rows of loop stitches.

Next row: Two short loops, skip one loop, knot in the next loop, * turn work knot in center of loop just made, leaving a ⅜ inch loop, turn work four knots over loop just made, * knot in same loop of fifth row, leaving ⅜ inch loop, repeat between, *skip one loop of fifth row, knot in next loop and repeat from the beginning.

The third collar requires ¼ yard of Brussels net and one ball of No 70 crochet cotton.

Round motif: Make a ring ¼ inch in diameter, and work * 4 knot stitches into ring, ⅛ in loop, repeat from * 3 times.

2d row: Join to picot, knot in next picot, making a ½ inch loop—repeat all around.

3d row: Work 6 small loops in each large loop and make another row of small loops.

5th row: 5 small loops, skip 1 loop knot in next loop, repeat all around.

6th row: 4 small loops, skip long loop, knot in next loop, making a half inch loop, repeat from beginning all around.

7th row: 3 small loops, 6 small loops over long loop, repeat all around.

8th row: 2 small loops, knot in 3d loop over chain in half inch loop, knot in next loop, knot in next free loop of motif, leaving a half inch loop; repeat from beginning all around.

Ninth row: 1 small loop, 7 small loops over long loop, knot in next small loop, 7 small loops over next long loop and repeat from beginning all around and make 11 more motifs for the front and 6 for the back of the collar, joining the mat loops as illustrated.

Pin wheels between motifs, join thread to upper free loop of lower right hand motif, knot in lower free loop of next motif, leaving a 1 inch loop, 10 knot stitches over loop, knot in lower free loop of next motif, leaving a half inch loop, 10 knot stitches over loop, knot in upper free picot of next motif, 10 knot stitches over loop, 10 knot stitches over remainder of 1st loop.

Edging: Work 5 rows of small loops

Sixth row: 4 loops, turn work, skip 1 loop knot in the next loop, leaving a half inch loop, turn work and make 8 small loops in loop just made, and repeat from the beginning for the length required. Make up the collar as illustrated.

BAD BREATH
Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets Get at the Cause and Remove It

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel, act gently on the bowels and positively do the work.

People afflicted with bad breath find quick relief through Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. The pleasant, sugar-coated tablets are taken for bad breath by all who know them.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets act gently but firmly on the bowels and liver, stimulating them to natural action, clearing the blood and gently purifying the entire system. They do that which dangerous calomel does, without any of the bad after effects.

All the benefits of nasty, sickening, griping cathartics are derived from Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets without griping, pain or any disagreeable effects.

Dr. F. M. Edwards discovered the formula after seventeen years of practice among patients afflicted with bowel and liver complaints, with the attendant bad breath.

Olive Tablets are purely a vegetable compound mixed with olive oil; you will know them by their olive color. Take one or two every night for a week and note the effects. 15c and 30c.

To Architects and Builders—

The Kitchen Stove

PRESENT-DAY conditions have compelled reduction in the size of the kitchen. Yet, women do not complain about the small kitchen, because it saves miles of steps and days of cleaning annually. They do not complain except when the installed equipment lacks modern features and efficiency.

The ONE article of installed equipment in the modern kitchen which MUST help to make work easier and "hours-spent-in-the-kitchen" fewer is —the kitchen stove. When specifying or purchasing stoves for kitchens there are several things for you to consider, if you want the apartment to appeal to the woman—if you want her so thoroughly contented that she will remain a tenant for a long time.

The Qualities a Good Stove Should Have

First, it should be big enough—a range on which the housewife can prepare easily a whole meal for the family at one time. Second, it should be so designed that she will not have to stoop to bake or broil. Third, a range that is well-built—where valves will not leak; oven doors will not become warped; oven linings and racks will not become distorted. Fourth, a range that is easy to clean—one where the parts most apt to become soiled are white enameled. Fifth, a range that is economical in its use of fuel. Sixth, a range that will help the housewife (bride or matron) to obtain perfect results with everything she bakes—a range that will give her time for other work or pleasure.

This sixth item means more to any woman than all the other advantages combined.

But what kind of a stove, you may ask, will enable any woman to obtain perfect baking results every time—a stove that will shorten the time spent in cooking? Most any woman can tell you—a gas range equipped with the famous Lorain Oven Heat Regulator, the device that accurately measures and automatically controls the heat of the oven.

The Lorain Oven Heat Regulator, and the service back of it, enables the housewife to obtain perfect baking results with each and every attempt.

Before the advent of the Lorain Oven Heat Regulator women measured oven heat by guess. Tests have proved that the most experienced cooks guess oven heats from fifty to one hundred and fifty degrees over or under. Knowing the difficulty of guessing the oven heat correctly, and the necessity of doing so if perfect results are to be obtained, many professional cooks began using an oven thermometer.

Thermometer Insufficient

But, a thermometer cannot regulate temperatures. With "set" valves temperatures will vary many degrees in a single baking. The Lorain Oven Heat Regulator automatically maintains any temperature at which the Red Temperature Wheel is set.

With each Lorain-equipped Gas Range is furnished a Direction Book which tells the housewife the exact temperatures to use for various dishes cooked or baked in the oven. It also tells the exact length of time to cook each dish. Thus, with the Lorain Regulator, an ordinary alarm clock, and Recipes giving Time and Temperature* any person, man or woman, young or old, can achieve perfect results with every attempt.

Cooks a Whole Meal Unattended

Accurate measurement and control of oven temperatures have brought to users of Lorain-equipped Gas Ranges many additional advantages. Whole Meal Cooking is one. The woman puts an entire meal in the oven in the early afternoon (soup, roast of meat, vegetables to be boiled, and desserts to be baked). She then sets the Red Wheel at a low temperature and goes where she pleases for the entire afternoon. When she returns many hours later she finds the dinner deliciously done, hot, and ready to serve.

Oven Canning is another great advantage enjoyed by users of Lorain-equipped Gas Ranges. Fruits are packed cold in ordinary glass jars, which are then placed in the oven. An hour or so later they are removed, the lids tightened, and the canning is done.

In Universal Use

Over 1000 schools and universities now use Gas Ranges equipped with the Lorain Oven Heat Regulator to teach young women the science of cookery. These famous stoves are also used in the test kitchens of dozens of manufacturers of nationally-known food products. In addition, there are thousands upon thousands in use in homes, apartments, hospitals, churches, etc., in all parts of the United States.

Practically every Gas Company and store that sells gas ranges, sells one or more of the makes of Lorain-equipped Gas Ranges listed below. Each make has sizes, styles, and finishes to fit, and harmonize with, every type of kitchen.

Cost More—But are Worth It

Of course, Lorain-equipped Gas Ranges cost more than ordinary stoves. But, the fine workmanship and excellent materials make them so attractive in appearance, make them last so much longer, that you will profit in the end. Moreover, the advantages of the Lorain Oven Heat Regulator make so strong an appeal to the woman that she will invariably prefer a house or apartment wherein they are installed.

*The following well-known national publications now give exact measurements of Time and Temperature in published recipes—an incomparable service for users of Lorain-equipped Gas Ranges: Delineator, Designer, McCall's, Good Housekeeping, Modern Priscilla, Woman's Home Companion, Pictorial Review, American Cookery, Forecast Magazine.

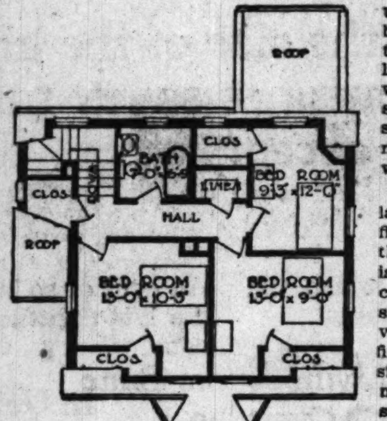
FIRST FLOOR



SECOND FLOOR

FACE BRICK ON FOUR SIDES.

SOMEWHAT different in type from most of those which have appeared heretofore is the house illustrated today. This difference is due in large measure to the fact that the main entry is at the side of the house instead of nearer to the front or center of the building. Such a side entry requires a special arrangement of the rooms inside the house. It is interesting to note that it is being widely adopted in the designs of many of the newer homes.

As will be seen, the building is almost entirely devoid of hallways. Much of the space which is ordinarily lost for this purpose is saved and added to the other rooms.

Before going into a detailed description of the interior planning it may be well to say a few words about the handsome face brick exterior. The many advances made in the manufacture of face brick and the widespread use of this material for homes and monumental buildings alike have reduced the price substantially. For this reason there is no need to limit the use of face brick to the street exposure. The relatively small added cost of using face brick for all outside walls is a minor item. Intending builders now recognize the advantage of using face brick for all outside walls, so that the house may be equally pleasing to the eye from any angle.

There is something always substantial and permanent connected with face brick. It gives to the owner a sense of enduring citizenship in his community, and requires practically no upkeep. In this respect it differs from the face brick manufactured thirty or forty years ago, which because of less scientific methods became discolored in the course of time, and required painting. Because of its nonabsorptiveness it remains clean, and retains the original color for an indefinite period of years. Hence, the only upkeep cost for the exterior of the home is limited to the repainting of the trim around the doors and windows, which is a small item, as may be seen from the small amount of woodwork exposed to the elements.

Brick is used again for paving the floor of the entry hall. In the stair hall there is a coat closet for the convenience of guests.

The architect, Geo. W. Repp of Chicago, has placed the housewife's workshop, the kitchen, just a half dozen steps from the front entry, so that the door may be answered conveniently. The kitchen has been carefully laid out, and is especially adaptable to modern culinary needs. A large apron sink with drip on either side is placed under a double window. To the right, and lighted by another double window, is the kitchen cabinet. On the opposite wall, and set within an especially devised nook, is the kitchen range, from which the odors of cooking may be easily conducted to a chimney flue directly behind it. Here also is a convenient pantry case, extended from floor to ceiling; also a broom closet. The refrigerator is placed in a separate compartment outside the kitchen door, where it may be filled readily, without the iceman's smudging up the kitchen floor. Being located away from the heat of the kitchen, the ice supply is conserved at all times. Furthermore, the icebox may be used the year round. All of this makes for a delightfully cheerful and compact work room. Breakfasts may be served in this room, too, eliminating the setting of a table in the dining room.

In glancing over the plans and noticing the large living and dining rooms, it might occur to some that too much space in the average home is given over to grown-ups. If the dining room could be made a part of the living room, or if it could be so arranged with respect to its equipment that it could be used, when desirable, for a children's playroom, the needs of the modern household would be more fully met. When there are children under school age, especially, it is difficult for the young housewife, who does her own work, to give the children the exercise and play to which they are entitled. In winter, particularly, she is handicapped in this respect.

By having the dining room furniture of a type which is not too expensive and which could be refinished if necessary, and by putting French doors between the living room and dining room shown in the plans, this space could be used for a children's playroom. Doors and windows could be opened so that the young ones could romp around, well clothed, enjoying the fresh air, under the watchful eye of the mother, from her kitchen workshop adjoining. Such a room might have a linoleum floor, in a tile or brick pattern, which could be tidied up whenever necessary. There should be built-in cabinets for the children's toys. The formal dining room is so little used in the average home that it would be interesting to learn whether some such arrangement as has been suggested in the preceding lines has not already been worked out elsewhere.

The living room is most attractively laid out in this design. The large brick fireplace and the hearth are, of course, the center theme around which all else is planned. In probably no other specific way has the return to home ownership been more significant than by the vogue favoring coal or wood burning fireplaces. Doubtless this has been considerably effected by the improvements made in fireplace equipment and design. The old fashioned, smoky fireplace has become a thing of the past. Directly opposite the hearth is a large bay window, with a triple window in the center and single windows on the sides. Built into this is a useful window seat. This space could be used, however, for a flower or plant arbor, in which ferns, rubber plants, and other things that grow may be placed to brighten up the room all year.

Upstairs there are three bedrooms and a bath, together with a linen closet. Each of the bedrooms is lighted by windows on diagonally opposite walls. The dormer window projection is especially interesting, as it makes pleasing little nooks in two of the rooms. The wall space is arranged so that none of the windows is obstructed by furniture. The ample clothes closets—especially the one with the window—will be appreciated by every housewife. The linen closet is in the hallway, just off the bathroom. The latter is placed at the head of the stairs, leading to the first floor, so that it is conveniently disposed for the use of guests.

Because of the large amount of moisture and condensation resulting, for instance, from a bath tub filled with steaming hot water, the bathroom walls are plastered on metal lath which, because of its nonabsorptiveness, does not show the customary streaks, especially on the ceiling and upper parts of the walls. Paint only should be used for the finish of such rooms. It is exceedingly doubtful economy to use any other decorative material, because of the difficulty experienced in keeping the walls clean and unspotted.

P. E. T.: It is often less monotonous to have different harmonizing colors and materials for upholstery. One chair may be done in a good piece of gros and petit point tapestry, the other in taupe or Burgundy mohair velvet. The davenport may combine the two. If the figures and colors of the rug are unobtrusive, figured draperies may be used in the same room. The wall paper should be plain.

* *

J. M. G.: In the northeast bedroom have draperies of jade pink rep over old ivory glass curtains. Let the bed cover be of the same rep, boxed to fit, and trimmed with narrow sage green and old ivory upholsterer's fringe.

* *

O. H.: If your voile curtains have French headings, a simple piece of the same material, made into a French heading, without any further hanging beneath it, could be shirred on to the rods to cover the bare space between the curtains. This would do away with the necessity of double rods.

A FRIEND IN NEED

by Sally Joy Brown

I want to be the medium through which the friend in deed and the friend in need may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy, and you would gladly give it if you knew how to go about it. Write to me and I shall be happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper. When information is wanted by mail a stamped addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send article to The Tribune, but write for the address of the applicant, and send direct.

This department appears every day in the Daily Tribune.

OUR EASTER GREETING.

EASTER Sunday—the day of springtime and hope for all, and the day of sacred memories for all Christian people! And because it is a day of joy, and springtime gladness, this department wants to voice its thanks to all of you who have done so much this last winter to spread happiness among Chicago's poor.

The calls upon your generosity have been many—but the good done has been worth the effort manifold. Now that winter—always the time of bitterest trial to the poor—is coming to an end, this department can bear testimony that today, thanks to the good people who have answered appeals printed in the Friend in Need column, there are hundreds upon hundreds of individuals and families who are facing the advent of spring with a courage and faith they never dared hope to possess again.

On behalf, therefore, of all these to whom new hope and courage have been given, we take pleasure in offering our Easter greeting. May your happiness on this day of rejoicing be equal to the happiness your generosity and sympathy have conferred upon the Friends in Need.

She Needs Clothes.

"I am coming to you to ask you if you can get any clothing for me. I am 17 years of age, and wear size 36 or 38. It is hard for me to buy clothing because my brother and I are the only ones working. I would be willing to call for it. M. M."

Hasn't some one just the thing for M. M.?

Silk and Patterns.

"I have some scraps of silk, gingham, and cretonne I shall be glad to send to any one desiring them. Also I have two coat patterns and one dress pattern for a 1 or 2 year old child and a hat pattern for an adult in cloche shape. I shall be happy to send these few articles anywhere. MRS. D. H."

Thank you for your offer. I know some one will take advantage of it soon.

Widow's Son Invalid.

"I wonder if some kind reader has an invalid chair for a child to let me have. My little boy of 6 is badly in need of one, as he is getting so heavy it is hard to carry him around. My husband recently passed away.

"MRS. L. M. C."

I do hope there is going to be an early response to this request, as the widow's little son is in great need of such a chair.

An Offer of Books.

"I have a set of business books, all new, for some one who is lacking a commercial course and will call for them. MRS. L. C. R."

Thank you very much. Your address will be given to the person interested.

Plenty of Shoes.

"I have about fifteen pairs of women's shoes of all kinds in good condition. If you know somebody who is in need of them I would like to help. The sizes are 5 to 6½.

"M. M. P."

The kind donor's name will be given upon request.

Italian Film Tells Bible Stories Well

"AFTER SIX DAYS"

Produced in Italy. Distributed by Epic. Directed by Vay and Gariazzo. Presented at the Castle theater.

THE CAST.

(PART of the cast. If I gave you the WHOLE cast you wouldn't have time to go to church.)

Adam	Umberto Semrebene
Eve	Ada Marucelli
Pharaoh	Scatigna
Moses	Guido Guducci
Joseph	Lucio Flamma
Tamah	Ilean Leondoff

By Mae Tinee.

I wish that I knew all of you
And could send cards to each of you!
But Easter cheer to all of you
I'll wish this way—from me to you.

Good Morning!

"AFTER SIX DAYS" is a cinema version of Old Testament happenings made by an Italian company on the ground where it is reputed they occurred. It's only ten or eleven reels long now—but it was sixty-three when the American company that is distributing it decided to take it over! The cinema surgery necessary to shape it into program lengths has, however, been excellently done. To my way of thinking, "After Six Days" has "The Ten Commandments" licked.

The latter is ornate and effortful. The former is convincing and effortless in that nobody seems striving for effect. It is great and it is simple. The Bible stories we have been taught to believe unfold before our eyes so naturally that while the miracles thrill—they still appear logical.

The picture carries you from the days of Adam and Eve to the time of Solomon in all his glory. You witness the birth of knowledge. There is the tale of Cain and Abel; of Joseph and his coat of many colors; of the tribulations of the chosen people and their final deliverance from the crushing heel of the Pharaohs. A dozen other episodes go to make up the whole.

Every Inch the Prophet.

The Golden Calf episode is better done than it is in "The Ten Commandments." Also, it seems to me, the parting of the waters has been more satisfactorily accomplished. And though Theodore Roberts makes a splendid Moses, the Moses of "After Six Days" is far more the prophet conjured up by your imagination, than that of America's beloved veteran actor.

The mob scenes are most impressive. You never for a moment have the sensation of watching the carefully directed efforts of crowds of "extras." No, the multitudes of people

Letting Headlines Tell Latest News of Filmdom

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—Headlines for the week would read like this:

Norma Talmadge Greets Joe Schenck with Kiss.
Anita Stewart Leaves Hollywood in Tears.
Carmel Myers Gives Big Farewell Dinner at Club Petroushka.
Draper Daugherty, Son of Former Attorney General, Enters Films.
Miss Dupont and Virginia Pearson in Bankruptcy Court.
Theodore Roberts Smokes First Cigar Since Illness.
Charlie Chaplin Denies, and Denies, and Denies.

And on top of everything Viola Dana decided to quit being cute and enter the emotional field in the fillums. Viola moved her makeup box from her dressing room at Metro, where it has been at home for five years, and said:

"Here goes. I'm tired of being funny. It's a terrible strain to be so cute for five years. I am all grown up now, if I ever will be. Leave Hollywood? No, I think I'll stick around and see what's doing."

tired of being funny; in future she will emote.

We're all getting rid of our complexes. Even Conrad Nagel, to whom we point with pride, was nearly involved in a little scandal. It happened when Mickey Neilan was directing Conrad and Mickey's wife, Blanche Sweet, in a marriage scene. The Rev. Neal Dodd, who is a minister on and off the screen, was saying the marriage ceremony. He was in the middle of it when Mickey yelled:

"Stop it. Can't you? Don't you know if you finished Nagel and Blanche would both be bigamists?"

So the reverend gentleman meekly mumbled something about bigger and better pictures.

Carmel Myers gave a charming dinner at the Club Petroushka on Friday night, to say, "Until we meet again." She leaves for Rome with her mother in a week or two—as soon as she thoroughly vamps her current film victim, "Mr. Georgie F. Babbitt."

Carmel's gown was of French blue trimmed in steel beads and bands of white fur. She presided over the dancing contest, and gave the winner an oil painting of herself.

Carmel's guests were magazine and newspaper writers. Perhaps because Carmel used to help edit a paper. Or perhaps her persistent admirer, Joe Jackson, belongs to the clan.

When Miss Myers was getting her passport, she stopped a moment over "Distinguishing Marks." Then she wrote: "Dimples in the Back."

Orchestra Closes Its Thirty-Third Season

By Edward Moore.

MR. STOCK and the Chicago Symphony orchestra are on the point of winding up the thirty-third season of the organization in Chicago. A final "pop" on Thursday afternoon, a final pair of subscription concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday night, and symphonic silence will prevail at Orchestra hall until next October.

Activities for the conductor and his men will last a bit longer. They have a bit of spring touring to do and a number of May festivals to play, the whole extending until about June 1. As soon as may be thereafter Mr. Stock will start on his annual search for new compositions in Europe, and the orchestra, or at least the larger part of it, will presumably go to Ravinia, though no official decree has as yet been published from that pleasant place of summer opera.

FREDERICK STOCK,
Conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchestra.
[De Gueldre Photo.]

Perhaps more has been learned about Mr. Stock's gifts as a conductor in this season just closing than in any other single year since in 1905 he took up the baton that Theodore Thomas had just laid down. At least, attention thereto became more emphasized. This was partly because he made a brief trip into a field that before that time was new to him, and partly there were at least two chances to compare him and his orchestra with other conductors and other orchestras. In both cases one is able to dismiss chauvinism in arriving at an opinion.

Tempted to Comparison.

Those who went to the opera last fall will have no difficulty in remembering that Wagner's "Siegfried," with Mr. Stock on the conductor's stand, was one of the bright spots of the season. It was decidedly a man's size job, with many things to contend with. He edited the score, cutting out all the nonessentials and keeping the good points, he was given a nonstar cast of principals, the scenery was depressing, and certain details of staging were maddening. Yet by its musical values, in the orchestra and on the stage, it rated as a brilliant achievement.

When other orchestral organizations presented themselves for hearing it was, perhaps, a tactical error, certainly less their good fortune than that of the Chicago group, that they should be heard in some of the same works that he and his musicians had played a short time before. At that, it may have been difficult to avoid comparisons, considering the size of the Chicago Symphony's répertoire.

One had a curious sensation while the others were playing, something like sitting on a bank and watching the "Man and the Masses" Is Weak Protest Against War

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—It does not occur to us that the Theater guild will get far with its sixth and last production of the season, which is Ernst Toller's "Man and the Masses."

Ernst, you may recall, if you have read your recent history clear, is a young man who went to war for Germany early in the fray, and came back as soon thereafter as they would let him.

On the western front he suffered such nervous and spiritual shocks that he turned revolutionist. Back in Berlin he sought to organize the radical students against war. Later he was the leader of the German soviets, and escaped arrest only by keeping under cover.

BLANCHE YURKA,
principal in Theater guild's latest production.
[Sarony Photo.]

They caught him in 1919, after he had succeeded Kurt Eisner and was in command of the Red army, and put him in jail. He is there yet. After seeing "Man and the Masses" I am not surprised. But something tells me Ernst would do much better in a sanitarium.

"Man and the Masses" is a protest against war and a plea for a world brotherhood. But its message is vague and its projection incoherent.

Preaching Peace and No Bloodshed.

The story is told mostly by an earnest young woman revolutionist who leaves her patriotic husband to lend aid to the workers. Husband, being stodgy and a slave to duty, symbolizes law, order, and the state.

After wife joins the protesters she suffers from a succession of distorted visions. She sees the stock exchange as a whirling mess of mashed bankers making ticker holidays of every army disaster. She preaches peace and no bloodshed to the revolutionaries and, when they vote her down, she sees them dancing wildly in front of a shadowed row of gibbets from which they are shortly to hang.

Finally, badgered and beaten, she begins to doubt God. But rather than accept a pardon at the cost of indorsing the state, she goes to her execution and leaves a couple of women representing the still quarreling masses fighting over her belongings.

The Toller piece is another of the continental dramas that will have to make its appeal to a particular section of the guild public. We wish them joy of it.

Blanche Yurka is impressively earnest as the lady protagonist and Jacob Ben-Ami assists her as a Nameless One who keeps the people stirred up. Lee Simonson has staged the drama after the German models, and achieves several striking effects with a small but particularly well trained crowd.

Years back, when the Messrs. Bolton, Wodehouse, and

On Taking Identity Away from the Actors

By Frederick Donaghey.

A LETTER comes from O. M. Peters to ask and to say: "Why not a little of the Who's-Who in your stimulating reports of the Russians' plays? Why not identify the actors for what they do that's especially good in each play? God and many a discomfited ham of the native stage know that you know how—plus! . . . 'Tisn't, Old Fellow, that I wish to use you as my vicar in playgoing; for I'm one of the faithful in the Great Northern; and am in a panic lest, when the engagement ends, I shall find myself spoiled for all other actors. But who is better than who, and why, would be good reading. Or, would it?"

JOE COOK
He's the funny-man in Vanities of 1923
[Kesslère Photo]

And Mr. Peters' notion brings to mind a glorious suggestion proffered to managers years ago by Charles Frederic Nirdlinger, who wrote well about the theater, and badly for it. You may recall his adaptation from Echegaray's "El Gran Galeoto," "The World and His Wife," in which Faversham acted for a season. Some of his feuilletons on the stage of the Eighteen-nineties are collected in a book called "Masks and Mummers"; and 'twas in that I ran on to his idea that the names of the actors should not be printed in the playbill: that the audience should not be apprised of their identity, and, so, might be left unhampered by reputations and réclame in the bestowal of applause for merit. The reviewers, too: they, in Mr. Nirdlinger's theory, should be left without a clue to the name of any of the players, and compelled to write of the good or the bad acting of the man who was Hamlet or the woman who was Lady Macbeth.

Sorting Them.

Mr. Nirdlinger's fantastic scheme is reasonably workable in the case of the visiting Russians, who make their appeal as an ensemble, and not as individual players. The least of them is as good as the best of them for what he or she has to do in the performance of any one play. Because of their being cast in dominating parts, three or four are picked out and talked about: Katchaloff, Moskvin, Mrs. Tchekoff, Stanislavsky, and Leonidoff. . . . If the company doesn't return (and Mr. Gest says its return is not a probability), who a year hence will care for or recall the other —offs and —ovas, the —ieffs and —ievas, the —seffs and the —skayas, the —avsks and the —enkos? Not even those of us who are most devoted to them as they go their fascinating way through the répertoire. . . .

If I gave way to Mr. Peters' polite urge, it might be to say that I have preferred performances in which the noncelebrities of the company acted rôles in which I had seen

THE OUTLINE OF SCIENCE

EDITED BY Professor J. ARTHUR THOMSON

A PLAIN STORY SIMPLY TOLD ...... XVIII.—THE ASCENT OF MAN; HIS RELATIONSHIP WITH A SIMIAN STOCK

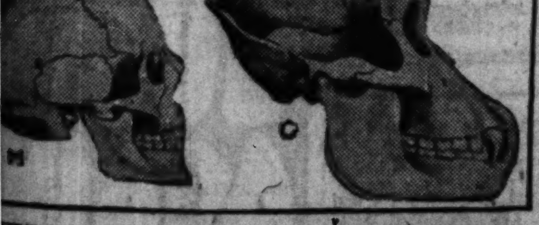
NO one thinks less of Sir Isaac Newton because he was born as a very puny infant, and no one should think less of the human race because it sprang from a stock of aboreal mammals. There is no doubt as to man's apartness from the rest of creation when he is seen at his best—"a little lower than the angels, crowned with glory and honor." "What a piece of work is a man! How noble in reason! How infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension so like a God." Nevertheless, all the facts point to his affiliation to the stock to which monkeys and apes also belong. Not, indeed, that man is descended from any living ape or monkey; it is rather that he and they have sprung from a common ancestry—are branches of the same stem. This conclusion is so momentous that the reasons for accepting it must be carefully considered. They were expounded with masterly skill in Darwin's "Descent of Man" in 1871—a book which was but an expansion of a chapter in "The Origin of Species" (1859).

Anatomical Proof.

The anatomical structure of man is closely similar to that of the anthropoid apes—the gorilla, the orang, the chimpanzee, and the gibbon. Bone for bone, muscle for muscle, blood vessel for blood vessel, nerve for nerve, man and ape agree. As the conservative anatomist, Sir Richard Owen, said, there is between them "an all-pervading similitude of structure." Differences, of course, there are, but they are not momentous except man's big brain, which may be three times as heavy as that of a gorilla. The average human brain weighs about 48 ounces; the gorilla brain does not exceed 20 ounces at its best. The capacity of the human skull is never less than 55 cubic inches; in the orang and the chimpanzee the figures are 26 and 27½, respectively. We are not suggesting that the most distinctive features of man are such as can be measured and weighed, but it is important to notice that the main seat of his mental powers is physically far ahead of that of the highest of the anthropoid apes.

Man alone is thoroughly erect after his infancy is past; his head weighted with the heavy brain does not droop forward as the ape's does; with his erect attitude there is perhaps to be associated his more highly developed vocal organs. Compared with an anthropoid ape, man has a bigger and more upright forehead, a less protrusive face region, smaller cheek bones and eyebrow ridges, and more uniform teeth. He is almost unique in having a chin. Man plants the sole of his foot flat on the ground, his big toe is usually in a line with the other toes, and he has a better heel than any monkey has. The change in the shape of the head is to be thought of in connection with the enlargement of the brain, and also in connection with the natural reduction of the muzzle region when the hand was freed from being an organ of support and became suited for grasping the food and conveying it to the mouth.

Every one is familiar in man's clothing with traces of the past persisting in the present, though their use has long since disappeared. There are buttons on the back of the waist of the morning coat to which the tails of the coat used to be fastened up, and there are buttons, occasionally with buttonholes, at the wrist which were once useful in turning up the sleeve. The same is true of man's body, which is a veritable museum of relics. Some anatomists have made out a list of over a hundred of these vestigial structures, and though this number is perhaps too high there is no doubt that the list is long. In the inner upper corner of the eye there is a minute tag—but larger in some races than in others—which is the last dwindling relic of the third eyelid, used in cleaning the front of the eye, which most mammals possess in a large and well developed form. It can be easily seen, for instance, in ox and rabbit. In man and in monkeys it has become a useless vestige, and the dwindling must be associated with the fact that the upper eyelid is much more mobile in man and monkeys than in the other mammals. The vestigial third eyelid in man is enough of itself to prove his relationship with the mammals, but it is only one example out of many. Some of these are discussed in the article dealing with the human body, but we may mention the vestigial muscles going to the ear trumpet, man's dwindling counterpart of the skin twitching muscle which we see a horse use when he jerks a fly off his flanks, and the short tail which in the seven weeks old human embryo is actually longer than the leg. Without committing ourselves to a belief in the entire uselessness of the vermiform appendix, which grows out as a blind alley at the junction of the small intestine with the large, we are safe in saying that it is a dwindling structure—the remains of a blind gut which must have been capacious and useful in ancestral forms. In some mammals, like the rabbit, the blind gut is the bulkiest structure in the body, and bears the vermiform appendix at its far end. In man the appendix alone is left, and it tells its tale. It is interesting to notice that it is uausly longer in the orang than in man, and that it is very variable, as dwindling structures tend to be. One of the unpleasant expressions of this variability is the liability to go wrong: hence appendicitis. Now, these vestigial structures are, as Darwin said, like the unsounded—i. e., functionless—letters in words, such as the "o" in "leopard," the "b" in "doubt," the "g" in "reign." They are of no use, but they tell us something of the history of the words. So do man's vestigial structures reveal his pedigree. They must have an historical or evolutionary significance. No other interpretation is possible.



SIDE VIEW OF SKULL OF MAN (M) AND GORILLA (G).—Notice in the gorilla's skull the protrusive face region, the big eyebrow ridges, the much less domed cranial cavity, the massive lower jaw, the big canine teeth. Notice in man's skull the well developed forehead, the domed and spacious cranial cavity, the absence of any snout, the chin process, and many other marked differences separating the human skull from the ape's.

Some men, oftener than women, show on the inturned margin of the ear trumpet or pinna a little conical projection of great interest. It is a vestige of the tip of the pointed ear of lower mammals, and it is well named "Darwin's point." It was he who described it as a "surviving symbol of the stirring times and dangerous days of man's animal youth."

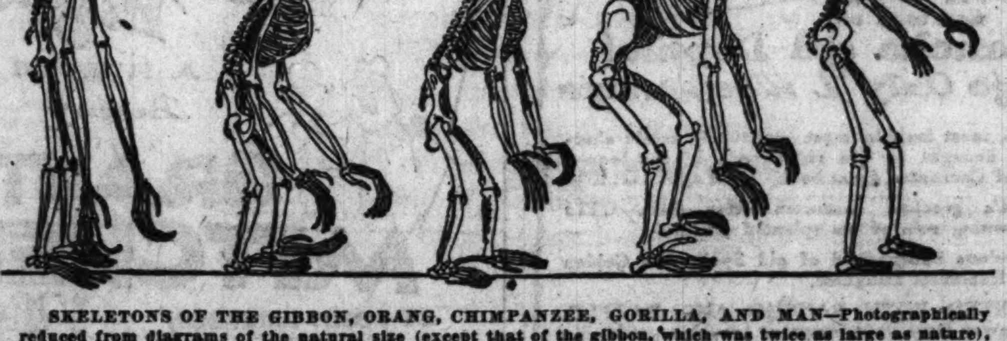
Physiological Proof.

The everyday functions of the human body are practically the same as those of the anthropoid ape, and similar disorders are common to both. Monkeys may be infected with certain microbes to which man is peculiarly liable, such as the bacillus of tuberculosis. Darwin showed that various human gestures and facial expressions have their counterparts in monkeys. The sneering curl of the upper lip, which tends to expose the canine tooth, is a case in point, though it may be seen in many other mammals besides monkeys—in dogs, for instance, which are at some considerable distance from the simian branch to which man's ancestors belonged.

When human blood is transfused into a dog, or even a monkey, it behaves in a hostile way to the other blood, bringing about a destruction of the red blood corpuscles. But when it is transfused into a chimpanzee there is an harmonious mingling of the two. This is a very literal demonstration of man's blood relationship with the higher apes. But there is a finer form of the same experiment. When the blood fluid (or serum) of a rabbit which has had human blood injected into it is mingled with human blood it forms a cloudy precipitate. It forms almost as marked a precipitate when it is mingled with the blood of an anthropoid ape. But when it is mingled with the blood of an American monkey there is only a slight clouding after a considerable time and no actual precipitate. When it is added to the blood of one of the distantly related "half-monkeys," or lemurs, there is no reaction, or only a very weak one. With the blood of mammals off the simian line altogether there is no reaction at all. Thus, as a distinguished anthropologist, Prof. Schwalbe, has said: "We have in this not only a proof of the literal blood relationship between man and apes, but the degree of relationship with the different main groups of apes can be determined beyond possibility of mistake." We can imagine how this modern line of experiment would have delighted Darwin.

Embryological Proof.

In his individual development, man does in some measure climb up his own genealogical tree. Stages in the development of the body during its nine months of ante-natal life are closely similar to stages in the development of the anthropoid embryo. Babies born in times of famine or siege are someitmes, as it were, imperfectly finished, and sometimes have what may be described as monkeyish features and ways. A visit to an institution for the care of children who show arrested, defective, or disturbed development leaves one sadly impressed with the risk of slipping down the rungs of the steep ladder of evolution; and even in adults the occurrence of serious nervous disturbance, such as "shell shock," is sometimes marked by relapses to animal ways. It is a familiar fact that a normal baby reveals the past in its surprising power of grip, and the careful experiments of Dr. Louis Robinson showed that an infant three weeks old could support its own weight for over two minutes, holding on to a horizontal bar. "In many cases no sign of distress is evinced and no cry uttered, until the grasp begins to give way." This persistent grasp probably points back to the time when the baby had to cling to its arboreal mother. The human tail is represented in the adult by a fusion of four or five vertebræ forming the "coccyx" at the end of the backbone, and is normally concealed beneath the flesh, but in the embryo the tail projects freely and is movable. Up to the sixth month of the ante-natal sleep the body is covered, all but the palms and soles, with longish hair (the lanugo), which usually disappears before birth. This is a stage in the normal development, which is reasonably interpreted as a recapitulation of a stage in the racial evolution. We draw this inference when we find that the unborn offspring of an almost hairless whale has an abundant representation of hairs; we must draw a similar inference in the case of man.

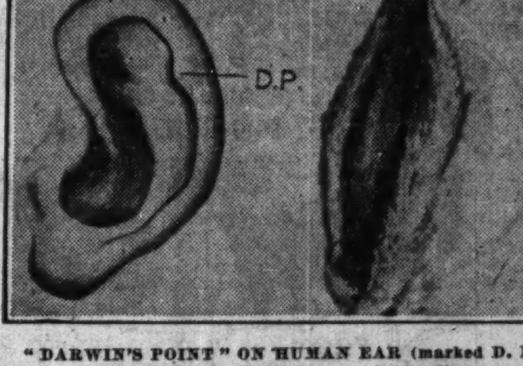


SKELETONS OF THE GIBBON, ORANG, CHIMPANZEE, GORILLA, AND MAN—Photographically reduced from diagrams of the natural size (except that of the gibbon, which was twice as large as nature), drawn by Mr. Waterhouse Hawkins from specimens in the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons.
[After T. H. Huxley, by permission of Messrs. Macmillan.]

It must be noticed that there are two serious errors in the careless statement often made that man in his development is at one time like a little fish, at a later stage like a little reptile, at a later stage like little primitive mammal, and eventually like a little monkey. The first error here is that the comparison should be made with embryo-fish, embryo-reptile, embryo-mammal, and so on. It is in the making of the embryos that the great resemblance lies. When the human embryo shows the laying down of the essential vertebrate characters, such as brain and spinal cord, then it is closely comparable to the embryo of a lower vertebrate at a simliar stage. When, at a subsequent stage, its heart, for instance, is about to become a four chambered mammalian heart, it is closely comparable to the heart of, let us say, a turtle, which never becomes more than three chambered. The point is that in the making of the organs of the body, say brain and kidneys, the embryo of man pursues a path closely corresponding to the path followed by the embryos of other backboned animals lower in the scale, but at successive stages it parts company with these, with the lowest first and so on in succession. A human embryo is never like a little reptile, but the developing organs pass through stages which very closely resemble the corresponding stages in lower types which are in a general way ancestral.

The second error is that every kind of animal, man included, has from the first a certain individuality, with peculiar characteristics which are all its own. This is expressed by the somewhat difficult word specificity, which just means that every species is itself and no other. So in the development of the human embryo, while there are close resemblances to the embryos of apes, monkeys, other mammals, and even, at earlier stages still, to the embryos of reptile and fish, it has to be admitted that we are dealing from first to last with a human embryo with peculiarities of its own.

Every human being begins his or her life as a single cell—a fertilized egg-cell, a treasure house of all the ages. For in this living microcosm, only a small fraction (one-one hundred and twenty-fifth) of an inch in diameter, there is condensed—who can imagine how?—all the natural inheritance of man, all the legacy of his parentage, of his ancestry, of his long prehuman pedigree. Darwin called the pinhead brain of the ant the most marvelous atom of matter in the world, but the human ovum is more marvelous still. It has more possibilities in it than any other thing, yet without fertilization it will die. The fertilized ovum divides and redivides; there results a ball of cells and a sack of cells; gradually division of labor becomes the rule; there is a laying down of nervous system and food canal, muscular system and skeleton, and so proceds what is learnedly called differentiation. Out of the apparently simple there emerges the obviously complex. As Aristotle observed more than 2,000 years ago, in the developing egg of the hen there soon appears the beating heart! There is nothing like this in the non-living world. But to return to the developing human embryo, there is formed from and above the embryonic food canal a skeletal rod, which is called the notochord. It thrills the imagination to learn that this is the only supporting axis that the lower orders of the backboned race possess. The curious thing is that it does not become the backbone, which is certainly one of the essential features of the vertebrate race. The notochord is the supporting axis of the pioneer backboned animals, namely, the Lancelets and the Round-mouths (Cyclostomes), such as the lamprey. They have no backbone in the strict sense, but they have this notochord. It can easily be dissected out in the lamprey—a long gristly rod. It is surrounded by a sheath which becomes the backbone of most fishes and of all higher animals. The interesting point is that, although the notochord is only a vestige in the adults of these types, it is never absent from the embryo. It occurs even in man, a short lived relic of the primeval supporting axis of the body. It comes and then it goes, leaving only minute traces in the adult. We cannot say that it is of any use, unless it serves as a stimulus to the development of its substitute, the backbone. It is only a piece of preliminary scaffolding, but there is no more eloquent instance of the living hand of the past.



"DARWIN'S POINT" ON HUMAN EAR (marked D. P.)—It corresponds to the tip (T) of the ear of an ordinary mammal, as shown in the hare's ear at the right. In the young orang the part corresponding to Darwin's point is still at the tip of the ear.

One other instance must suffice of what Prof. Lull calls the wonderful changes wrought in the dark of the ante-natal period, which recapitulate in rapid abbreviation the great evolutionary steps which were taken by man's ancestors "during the long night of the geological past." On the sides of the neck of the human embryo there are four pairs of slits, the "visceral clefts," openings from the beginning of the food canals to the surface. There is no doubt as to their significance. They correspond to the gill slits of fishes and tadpoles. Yet in reptiles, birds, and mammals they have no connection with breathing, which is their function in fishes and amphibians. Indeed, they are not of any use at all, except that the first becomes the eustachian tube, bringing the ear passage into connection with the back of the mouth, and that the second and third have to do with the development of a curious organ called the thymus gland. Persistent, nevertheless, these gill slits are, recalling even in man an aquatic ancestry of many millions of years ago.

When all these lines of evidence are considered, they are seen to converge in the conclusion that man is derived from a simian stock of mammals. He is solidary with the rest of creation. To quote the closing words of Darwin's "Descent of Man":

> We must, however, acknowledge, as it seems to be, that man, with all his noble qualities, with sympathy which feels for the most debased, with benevolence which extends not only to other men but to the humblest living creature, with his God-like intellect, which has penetrated into the movements and constitution of the solar system—with all these exalted powers—man still bears in his bodily frame the indelible stamp of his lowly origin.

We should be clear that this view does not say more than that man sprang from a stock common to him and to the higher apes. Those who are repelled by the idea of man's derivation from a simian type should remember that the theory implies rather more than this, namely, that man is the outcome of a genealogy which has implied many millions of years of experimenting and sifting—the groaning and travailing of a whole creation. Speaking of man's mental qualities, Sir Ray Lankester says: "They justify the view that man forms a new departure in the gradual unfolding of nature's predestined plan." In any case, we have to try to square our views with the facts, not the facts with our views, and, while one of the facts is that man stands unique and apart, the other is that man is a scion of a progressive simian stock. Naturalists have exposed the pit whence man has been digged and the rock whence he has been hewn, but it is surely a heartening encouragement to know that it is an ascent, not a descent, that we have behind us. There is wisdom in Pascal's maxim:

> It is dangerous to show man too plainly how like he is to the animals, without, at the same time, reminding him of his greatness. It is equally unwise to impress him with his greatness and not with his lowliness. But it is very profitable to recognize the two facts.

THE HORSE THIEF

BY LEWIS B. ELY AND SAM FORREST.

"THE HORSE THIEF" takes us back to the good old days when the chief excitement in the small town of the South was horse-trading; the pre-Ford period when perverseness passed for probity; when sharp practice was a thing to be admired, and truth and honor, so far as the horse was concerned, were hid in moth balls. The chief character in the play is one Doc Pusey, alias Old Fix-Fox. Doc was what might be called a cagey old horse-trader, and one not averse, when he could not buy a likely thoroughbred, to steal it. Old Fix-Fox was known to all the minor race tracks of his native state—a whimsical, curious, lovable character, but thoroughly reprehensible none the less.

MR. TRUEX in "New Toys" moves tonight from the Playhouse, where he has been a month, to the Central. . . . The Adelphi will be "dark" tonight: the plan to hold "Kelly's Vacation" over for Sunday was dropped, and the piece taken off last night. . . . When rewritten, the title will be cut to "Kelly," which is better: "Kelly's Vacation" is like a throwback to the days of "Muldoon's Picnic" and the rough-house afterpieces of the varieties.

"Simon Called Peter" was thus advertised for last week in Buffalo: "A real Holy-Week attraction that every real churchman should see!"; and there were protests, so that attendance was large, from all accounts.

Plays called, respectively, "Pansy," "The Rabbit's Foot," "Keep Kool!" "Top-Hole," and "Early to Bed" are to be tried out here-and-there this week. . . . Another is a satire on the free-love twitter, is by Lawrence Langer, and is called "Another Way Out."

E. H. Sothern called it a season last night, and sent his répertoire to the cedar chest. . . . Business hasn't been what it might have been had Miss Marlowe not sprained her ankle, although he offered, after she dropped out, to refund the cost of all tickets to those buyers who did not find the performances worth the money. And he took to scolding his audiences, after the manner of Richard Bennett, for not being larger than they were, although the audiences felt that they should have been thanked for being there at all. . . . And so-on. He talks of acting alone next season in "Hamlet" and "If I Were King," although the latter piece,—one of the best of its kind,—is in the process of being made into an operetta, with music by Hugo Félix, who writes good music.

William A. Brady is said to be willing to go into the two-a-day for $5,000 a week, doing a "turn" composed of excerpts from "King Lear" and a comic sketch. . . . An attempt to unionize the box-office men throughout the country is not meeting with success. A sufficient obstacle is the fact that these men are bonded by surety companies.

A Synge Play in Opera.

Do you recall a great little play by Synge, "Riders to the Sea," which the Irish Players gave in their first visit to Chicago? Well, as "The Call of the Sea," it has been made into an opera for Paris, with music by Henri Rabaud, who was in this country for a time as conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Miss Frances Nordstrom, who writes plays and acts in them, has staged one in London called "Her Market-Price." . . . "The Conquering Hero," another play of post-war reactions, is a failure in London, where the critics praised it.

Jack Donahue, a capital comic dancer who is making progress as a funny actor, is said to be the author of a piece for which Irving Berlin is writing tunes, that Donahue may star in it. . . . Miss Jane Cowl is said to be quietly preparing to make some small-town trials in afternoon performances of a new play from the German, although the cities, towns, and hamlets west of Pittsburgh are still panting for her Juliet.

"The Perfect Fit," reported to be a success in London, is the good comedy of Hungarian origin we knew as "A Tailor-Made Man" when Grant Mitchell was in it.

Miss Margaret Lawrence and Wallace Eddinger are to act in a travesty called "Julio and Romyette," by Mrs. Catherine Chisholm Cusing, who turned "Uncle Tom's Cabin" into "Topsy and Eva." . . . Eddie Buzzell, here last Winter in "The Town Clown" for a fortnight, is again the star of "The Gingham Girl," in which he performed through its season-long run in New-York. He is to go from that into "Good-for-Nothing Jones," which is a new version of "The Town Clown"—and that was a rewrite to tunes of "Nothing But Lies."

Sam Bernard, who idles a lot from choice, is to be in the fourth Music-Box Revue, due in New-York next September. . . . He was in the first one there, but did not come to Chicago in it, which was a pity: he is really funny.

The withdrawal last night of "Honeymoon House," after a run of seventeen weeks, leaves "Abie's Irish Rose" the survivor of six entertainments that were Chicago novelties in Christmas-week. The others were "The Highwayman," which ran five weeks; the Ziegfeld Follies, nine weeks; "Kiki," eleven weeks; and "The Nervous Wreck," fifteen weeks. . . . "Topsy and Eva," however, is but a week behind "Abie" in length of run to-date, although the latter is expected to be live matter here when next Christmas comes. It ran twenty-nine weeks in Cleveland, where a two-weeks' stop is an event, and is now shy a mere month of two uninterrupted years in New-York.

An actor named Abel Rosewall has been arrested on the charge of "pirating" the late Frank Bacon's play of "Lightnin'," acting it one place as "What a Wife Will Do" and another place as "The Road to Reno." . . . Play-piracy, once among the flourishing industries of the United States, has been a poor business in recent years—thanks to the organization of the theatrical business, however, rather than to the copyright statutes, which are far from adequate.

Oliver Morosco, who was an acrobat before he became an impresario, thinks it would be a great idea for him to return to the stage as an actor in a piece called "The Understanders" . . . An understander, in the lingo of the circus and the two-a-day, is the acrobat who stands under and supports those of his associates who clamber on his head, shoulders, and outstretched arms while the drummer rolls the drums.

Mrs. Morosco, who is Miss Selma Paley in the playbills, is to have the principal woman's rôle in "The Schemers," the play said to show up drama-critics for what they are. . . . Miss Maude Eburne, here for a time in "We Moderns," also is to be in the new exposé.

The Prosperous Preacher.

William Hodge, who has been looking after the uplift in New-York since mid-October in his play of "For All of Us," is at the end of his run there. . . . He spent most of last season with the play in Chicago.

Leopoldine Constantine, who was in Chicago twelve years ago in "Sumurun," is acting in Berlin Miss Barrymore's old rôle in Somerset Maugham's "Lady Frederick." . . . "Frou-Frou," which Bernhardt and all the other "emotional" actresses used to play, has just reached the Hungarian stage in an adaptation by Molnar, author of "Liliom" and "The Swan." Miss Grace George was the last American actress to revive the piece; and Simone gave a few performances in it when she was new in this country.

Edwin L. Helms has composed the tunes for "The Purple Cow," by Gelett Burgess and Miss Carolyn Wells. . . . Miss Mary Young, Miss Frances Howard [she was here in "The Best People"], John Craig, and John Halliday have the principal parts in "Dancing Mothers," which is said to be intended for Chicago.

Miss Peggy Wood, eager for the tuneless drama, is to have the name-rôle in "The Bride," a comedy by Stuart Olivier made over by George Middleton, Senator La Follette's son-in-law. . . Miss Isabel Irving and Ferdinand Gottschalk will be with her in it.

"Cobra," by Martin Brown, looked so good when tried out that it has been made ready for New-York; but only one member of the cast, Louis Calhern, is retained. Such well-knowns as Donald Gallaher, Miss Kay Laurell, and Miss Wanda Lyon are dropped, along with José Alexander and Miss Paula Shay. . . . New players are Ralph Morgan, Miss Judith Anderson, and John Wray, who was so good as the blackmailer in "Silence."

A new "team" is made up of George W. Monroe, in retirement for some time, and James Thornton, a celebrity of the two-a-day through more than three decades.

Miss Laura Hope Crews, who was Miss Grace George's co-star in "The Merry Wives of Gotham," reveals ambitions to stage plays, and is directing "My Dream-Girl," in which Miss Fay Bainter returns to song-and-dance, with William Woolf, who was rather good in "The Lady in Ermine," as the performer second in importance.

Isidore de Lara, who composes operas and gets them staged abroad, seeks to give to London a new opera-house seating 4,000, with the best seats at $1.25! . . . "Tons of Money," in which Sam Bernard was to have acted in this country, is in a second run in Paris, where it is called "I Have an Idea!" Lester Bryant is trying to get the American rights from the authors in London, where the farce had more than seven hundred performances.

"Footlights and Spotlights," Otis Skinner's autobiography, will be off the press and on the counters Wednesday. . . . He's been on the stage a long time, and has lots to tell.

WITH US TONIGHT: ONE OF THEM SINGS

MISS ANN HARDING
[Nickolas Muray Photo]

MISS EDITH DAY
[White Photo]

MISS HARDING comes to perform in the principal rôle in "The Horse-Thief," which is one of the seven novelties of the new week, now that "Henky" has been disclosed to Chicago sight and hearing. Not much is known about the young woman in this neighborhood, which she approaches with the cheers of Manhattan still ringing in her ears in tribute to what they say down there was some fine acting in the piece called "Tarnish."

Miss Day is slightly better known hereabout than is Miss Harding; for she was here some years ago as leading-woman with Frank Craven in "Going Up!" She is recalled as good in that piece, which was the one with "Tickle-Toe" among its tunes. She has since then originated the title-part of "Irene," and been through an ever-so-long London run in it, and been on the first-page, and been the star of "Wildflower" for its stay of more than a year in the New-York Casino. 'Tis in that she returns tonight.

Theater Guild Offers Drama by a Revolutionist

Kern were writing music plays for the best people, and Ray Comstock, aided by Morris Gest, was presenting them at the Princess theater and getting $5 a seat for them, there were ten or a dozen stories written predicting that this trio would one day do something quite as good as anything Gilbert and Sullivan ever did.

And perhaps they would—if they had not been so successful. Within a year or so they were rolling in royalties and disinclined to work. Also they began to get on each other's nerves, as the story goes, and each to feel that he was the most important of the three.

Whatever happened, they separated. Wodehouse, a gifted fictionist, returned to London. Bolton wrote a comedy or two of his own, including "Polly Preferred," and Kern went on thumping melodious paraphrases out of the grand piano in his swell apartment.

Some months back a truce of sorts was patched up, and the three of them agreed to work together on another play. "Sitting Pretty," at the Fulton, is the result.

Away to a Good Start.

It is a pleasant little piece, funny and foolish and tuneful. And although it does not strike high enough above the Broadway average to set anybody cheering, it is away to a good start, and will probably be here in June when you come down for the convention.

Bolton's book is concerned with a fat thief (Frank McIntyre) who goes about the country getting a young confederate adopted into rich homes that he may spy out the wall safes and jewels.

The confederate in this instance meets a schoolgirl from next door, and determines to go straight just before the last curtain.

Queenie Smith helps considerably. She is not quite the riotous hit she was in "Helen of Troy, N. Y.," but she dances so much better than most of the ballet school graduates who have found their way to the musical comedy stage that she strengthens any plot in which she figures.

Queenie has also gone in for acrobatic dancing to lend variety to her performance. Which isn't so good. Her leaps are amazing, and she can land as firmly upon her toes as the best of them. But she is so much more charming when she specializes in grace and the inspiring rhythms in which she has been trained, it seems a pity she should take on the uglier forms.

McIntyre, not working steadily these last several seasons, unless he has been hiding in the movies we have not seen, is more round and more bulky than ever. But he has a true comedy sense and the back to Broadway welcoming committee has been particularly happy applauding him.

Rudolph Cameron figures as a sane sort of juvenile and Gertrude Bryan, returning after several years' absence devoted to matrimony and the home, plays a small part well. But there isn't a decent singing voice among the lot of them.

Playing the Devil.

Fritz Lieber, who is giving himself and the back country a rest from the Shakespearean drama, is playing the devil in a modern piece called "Two Strangers from Nowhere" at the Punch and Judy theater.

Here is no horned Lucifer seeking to ensnare the innocent for the mere joy of distressing God. This outcast is secretly hoping to pave his way back to heaven with good deeds. Posing as a friendly scientist, he admits, none too subtly, that the only way he can hope to do this is to be repulsed by those he tempts.

Thus, if he advises a young wife to leave her husband and run away with a handsomer and more agreeable sweetheart of her youth, and she does it, he (the evil one) is additionally damned and pushed that much farther down the ladder.

But if she stand firm, putting her religion above her passion and refusing to go, then the devil is given a good mark. This is his contract with God, and therefore he is always hoping against hope that his victims will reject him, even though he is bound to tempt them to the top of his power.

In the play there are two young women, played by Gail Kane and Frances McGrath. Gail, as you might suspect, is fair and feverishly physical, and promptly sells her soul for a mess of diamonds and a rich but wicked old man. Also she dies unhappily in the third act.

Frances, on the other hand, equally fair but more composed, finds strength to reject Satan even after he has made his best sales talk to her—offering jewels, silken gowns, passion, the Riviera, and a divorce from her poor but honest mate.

Myron C. Fagan wrote "Two Strangers from Nowhere." He has written other plays, but I can't recall them at the moment. As an argument this one is interesting, but as drama it is not so much. There is considerable green light spilled over Satan and there are scenes in which the soul of a paralyzed aunt of the heroine walks unconventionally into the action, saving the heroine but giving the unregenerate a chance to hoot at the Fagan type of dramaturgy.

VIOLET!

MISS PEGGY JOYCE
[Don Barclay Photo.]

She is one her way hither as the First Actress of Earl Carroll's Vanities, wherein she pursues art and wears the jewelry. Miss Joyce will come ere the Russian actors leave; but she means them no harm, and wishes them well. One can, in fancy, hear her say: "Please deny that I am to become a member of the Moscow Art Theater. You see, the rouble is not what it was, the crown-jewels are gone, and, besides, my Russian is not yet perfected."

Italian Film Tells Bible Stories Well

moiling about appear to be doing so in genuine perturbation and panic.

The photography is unexpectedly good—for most foreign photography ISN'T. To be fair, though, one must admit that here "The Ten Commandments" has the advantage.

Where only the first part of the American made picture has to do with the Old Testament, the entire production "After Six Days" is devoted to it.

Easter week will undoubtedly find many at the doors of the Castle theater seeking admittance. Lots of people read the Bible and will be deeply interested in such a photoplay. Those who do and are not, however, had better save their money for "After Six Days" offers no modern version of any sort. There's a vamp in it—but she was a B. C. girl who loved and was loved by Solomon in all his glory—and she closes the picture!

See you tomorrow!

Voice of the Movie Fan

Cry of Anguish.

Dear Miss Tinee: "Flaming Passion," from Kathleen Norris' best selling novel, "Lucretia Lombard." Now, Miss Tinée, I feel certain you will take a healthy punch at this change in title and I, for one, urge you to use a little vitriol in your ink. What kind are the birds who dope out the delightful titles? It seems to me a title of this nature is a stigma on any picture and I'm not mid-Victorian.

This reminds me of the best thing W. E. Hill ever did. Two or three years ago he had great fun at the expense of the movies. One picture of that series depicted the dejected features of Mrs. So-and-So who had seen her story, "Up Hill and Down Dale to Grandma Higgins" cinematized under the name, "Scarlet Hips." That was the result of a brain blessed with wit, but when we have it in reality—ye gods. Razz the producers, please.

Saw "The Wanters" recently and had many good laughs where none was intended. I'm firmly convinced that all wealthy people are unhappy and, further, are hypocrites. If we could round up a few more pictures of this sort and send them together with the w. k. thirty-eight from N. W. to some isolated island, we would be genuine altruists.

J. B. D.

Thought It Wonderful.

Dear Miss Tinée: I don't see how you could be so little impressed with "The Ten Commandments." I saw it Saturday afternoon, and thought it a wonderful picture. Evidently many others shared my opinion, for there was a lot of applause. I only wished there had been more of the first part.

It is too bad Rod La Roque had such a contemptible part to play, as he seems to have a pleasing personality. He played his part well, but so did Theodore Roberts—he always does, no matter what part you give him—Edythe Chapman, Richard Dix, and Leatrice Joy. Nita Naldi played her part well, too, but I don't care for her personality—she gives me the creeps. The actress who was called the Chinese lily in the "Bright Shawl" would have been a good one for the part that Nita Naldi played.

I think it is a mistake for producers to tell how pictures are made. It takes all the romance out of a picture to hear how the sets are made and how much is faked. Of course, you know some of it is faked, but if you don't hear the particulars it seems much more real.

G. C.

Closing the Argument.

Dear Mae Tinée: How absurd to argue about Dorothy MacKaill. She's one of the most natural actresses and her charm and quaintness lie in that English beauty of hers. She has climbed up the ladder of fame and success, and now that she is almost at the top, some loose brained person writes a lot of spiteful stuff. She may be no fierce Pola or meek Mary—she doesn't have to be. She has it over a lot of others, and don't let 'em tell you different.

Anne.

KICK KORNER FOR MOVIE FANS

Its Object Objection.

We Win a Friend

Dear Miss Tinée: We are not picking a quarrel with Miss Tinée, but rather with the Daily Reader who takes exception to Miss Tinée's review of Joseph Schildkraut in "The Song of Love." Have we ever seen Mr. Schildkraut? Yes, once, and that was quite enough for us, thank you. After having seen the S. O. L., we had no desire to see "The Highwayman." We expect something more than handsomeness of our cinema heroes. Handsomeness is a burdensome word even for Mr. Schildkraut's shoulders to support.

Every cloud has its silver lining and for every reader lost, there is another gained; to wit, we have not been a daily reader of Miss Tinée's reviews (more's the pity) and it is obvious from the above that we were not much impressed by the Daily Reader's strenuous condemnation of Miss Tinée's reviews, but we gather that Miss Tinée might prove profitable and worth while cultivating for the reason that evidently she deals fairly with her public rather than to the interest of the purveyors of moving pictures.

Such honesty of purpose is rare these days and we are both appreciative and grateful for it. May we acknowledge ourselves a daily follower of Miss Tinée's reviews from this day on.

V. H. R.

[Editor's note: It seems like patting oneself on the back to print this letter, but I'm just so proud of it I have to! Thanks!]

Obeying an Impulse

Dear Mae Tinée: I've always wanted to carry out some of my sudden impulses and this happens to be one of the most recent ones. It's needless to say I read your column—we all do and rely on your good judgment of pictures.

Yesterday I saw Thomas Meighan's latest. He, as usual, was adorable, but as far as the picture is concerned, is good Sunday school entertainment. This isn't entirely my own opinion, but agrees with several who were in the party and countless more we overheard in the lobby.

Don't you think the children who followed at his heels were just a trifle exaggerated?

One of the Multitude.

[Editor's note: Ask me! Ask me!]

To the Point

Dear Miss Tinée: I read your criticisms every day simply because they are funny. When you roast pictures, I usually agree with you, but when you say a picture is good, I have my doubts. You will never make a successful critic, because you have your favorite stars.

K. L. M.

[Editor's Note: "Thank you for them kind words," she said. At least it's SOMETHING to be read!]

ASK ME! ASK ME!

JUNO: There's no reason why a large woman shouldn't appear in pictures, if she photographs well and can act. Send a stamped and self-addressed envelope for a list of producing firms.

OLD TIMER: You bet we're going to get out a magazine. A MAGAZINE!

RODDY: Conrad Nagel is married. So is Barbara La Marr. The latter has an adopted baby. She says she likes babies better than dogs. I think it was lovely thing for her to do, don't you?

OAK PARK: Yes, Mahlon Hamilton was one of the stars you saw taking scenes in your neighborhood. Hale Hamilton is not his brother.

ADA: William and Cecil De Mille are brothers. No, can't say I do. Vivian Martin is married. Please send a stamped and self-addressed envelope for the information on scenario writing and copyright laws. No trouble at all.

MR. MITCHELL classifies among the somebodies of the theater, and is popular for his acting in "Myself: Bettina," "Years of Discretion," "It Pays to Advertise," "Nothing But the Truth," "A Tailor-Made Man," "A Prince There Was," "The Champion," and "Kempy." He returns tomorrow night in "The Whole Town's Talking," in which he's been through a run in New-York.

Miss MacLean seems to be a new-comer in Chicago, although there come data with her photograph to indicate that she's been active elsewhere. She is one of the good-looking young women necessary to the casting of "Guess Again!": this is one of the new plays listed for tonight.

ART AND ARTISTS

Exhibit by Child Artist Displays Remarkable Power

A little wind blew out of the west.
Blossoms of May it bore on its breath.
A nightingale sang in a thicket at eve,
Its gold song sounded the hot day's death.

Love in the starlight, under the moon,
Love that has wearied along the road.
The little wind rustles the apple boughs.
Is the stream dry whose water has flowed?

The blue flowing water of yesteryear,
Under the bridge it danced to the sea—
Now its bed is dry. Does the wind still bring Dreams on its breath? Love has died for me.
E. J.

By Eleanor Jewett.

ABOUT Pamela Bianco's work, seen in the Arts club room at the Art institute, there is the atmosphere of poetry. It is unworldly, magical, romantic. It touches upon the most commonplace affairs, and turns them into verse. Not necessarily is it pathetic—one does not immediately jump to the conclusion of Cupid slain and Venus dying at the altar. The daylight is not pallid. The color is not that of ghosts. Yet neither is the sense of the paintings gay. Perfection is rarely gay. It is rather as if a wind, from the garden where grew the golden apples, had breathed upon the canvases, transforming the material facts they relate into wonder deeds.

Take, for example, the still lifes. These are numerous. Jugs, cups, a plate, a silver dish, onions, apples, grapes, plums—the usual subjects, as you readily see. But—and here is the point, the essence of this child artist's genius—not one of them is treated in the usual way. The fruit has a velvety bloom; the jugs have individuality, they are not so much jugs as inconsequential mediums for the expression of a marvelous surety of drawing and exactness of color. Perhaps it is this blend of surety and exactness that stamps the entire group of pictures as being unique.

At all events, we find the combination in each picture we examine. Even the misty landscapes are, under the mist, partitioned off in exact beauty. The plots of cultivated land balance; the house and barns are just so; the animals apparently are carefully matched and stationed. There is little left to confuse one. Possibly the most extreme example of this picturesque exactitude is found in "The Hoop Skirt," and, a delicious second example, in "The Holy Islands." Robert Bridges has a word of verse closely in tune with this last.

Alone, aloud in the raptured ear of men
We pour our dark nocturnal secret;
and then,
As night is withdrawn
From these sweet springing meads and bursting boughs of May, Dream, while the innumerable choir of day
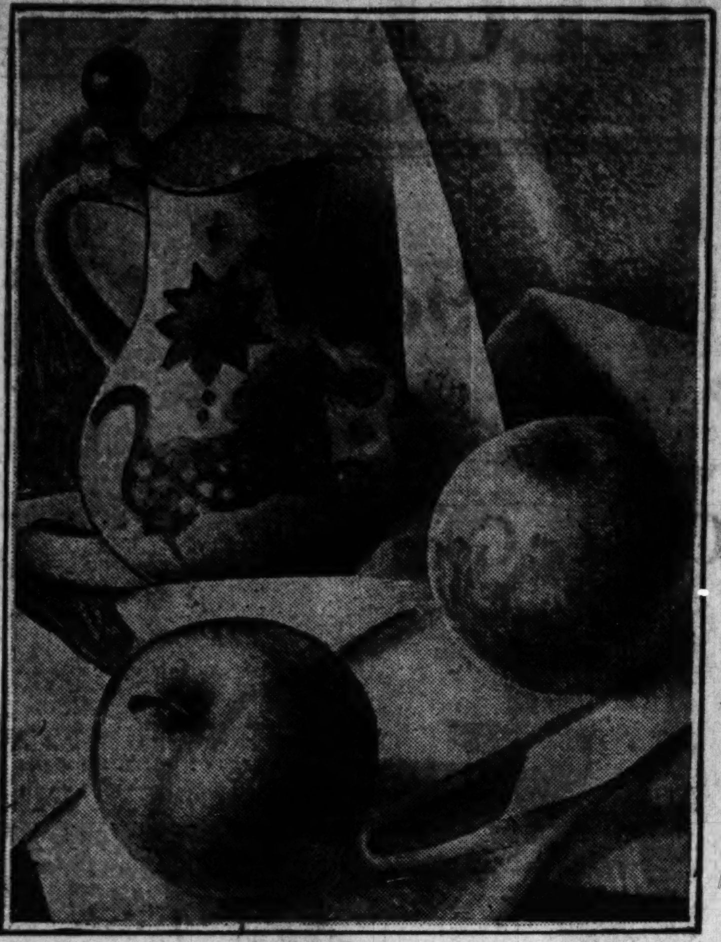
Welcome the dawn.



"The Blue Jug," by Pamela Bianco, in the Arts club room at the Art institute, where is being shown a unique exhibition by this child artist. It is too good to miss, almost too good to write about. The best one can say is to urge every one to enjoy it before it is withdrawn in the near future.

"The Weeping Willow" is a quaint and entrancing arrangement of trees. It is difficult to know where to stop in selecting pictures that should be particularly mentioned. Perhaps a wise scheme would be to tabulate, as thus: "The Silver Dish," "The Summer Porch," "Roofs," "Chelsea Gardens," "The Orchard," "Lake Warramaug," "Fiddle and Fruit," "The Pink Candle," "The Black Cat," and the "White Cat"—for you to look at, and to add, with as much emphasis as ink commands, the following summary scribbled on the back of my catalogue: "She can draw—She can paint—She can give ordinary things extraordinary values. The pictures are lovely. Pamela Bianco is a genius."

It is merely an opinion. If you disagree, then one or the other of us has missed something that unlocks the door to the truth of this little girl's remarkable power.

The exhibition of portraits and landscapes by John Singer Sargent opened a day or so before its scheduled date, last Monday, at the Art institute, and will continue until June 1. It is too small an exhibit to be considered as fully retrospective or even as affording an adequate summary of Sargent's genius. In the matter of genius, Sargent stands alone. (I think one may say this without fear of contradiction) from the standpoint that his power with the brush is practically unlimited. As a painter of portraits, whom have we standing shoulder to shoulder with him? As a painter of such canvases as the "Venetian Bead Stringers" and the "Venetian Glass Workers," where have we seen his fellow? As a painter of the out of doors, who surpasses him in such pictures as "Cypresses and Pines" or the "Marble Quarry at Carrara"? And then there is his versatility. Of a kind with these, but different, are the "Moorish Courtyard," "Interior," "The Simplon," "Reconnoitering," and a mountain lake landscape that, with its green waters, mountain rimmed, reminds one strongly of the western splendors of certain paintings by Oliver Dennett Grover.

It is not one type of picture that Sargent paints, but all types. He is, par excellence, the master of the brush. He found success early in life; in his twenties his genius was acknowledged, but success for him has never meant a period to effort and further achievement. His theory of art is founded on observation, so relates Prof. John Van Dyke in his book on "American Painting and Its Traditions."

"You see things that way (pointing slightly to the left) and I see them this way (pointing slightly to the right).

"So he suggested his theory of art to Mr. Van Dyke in a conversation at Gibraltar some fifteen years ago. With the way one did, the personal touch, to him there seemed little more to art. His theory, as Van Dyke states, places him in agreement with Henry James, whose much quoted definition of art runs: "Art is a point of view, and a genius a way of looking at things."

This, though, is a little to the side. To get back to our group of Sargent paintings now to be seen at the institute, a confession of being not quite satisfied with the exhibit will not go unexpressed. There are too few portraits. The New York exhibition had forty portraits, and even then the lack of several important ones was felt, but here there are only nine. Nine is just a taste. It makes you hunger for more.

"The nine are immensely unequal. The best, of course, is the simple, alive likeness of Mrs. Augustus Hemenway. The eyes, the hair, are wonderful. The lily in the dress is the perfect touch. How well Sargent knows what to paint! Second to this might be rated the fine piece of work in the portrait of the artist, William M. Chase. He stands a superb figure of a man, a brush in one hand, the other crowded with palette and more brushes.

The portrait of Miss Ada Rehan is a solid piece of painting—the stage triumphant. "Mrs. Charles E. Inches" is good, but not the best. The head of Joseph Jefferson is fascinating. The twisting eyes, rough hair, open, gnarled throat—it is a great combination, the essence of the actor.

Tragedy stalks in the portrait of Mrs. Charles Gifford Dyer, and beauty is twin to the Hon. Mrs. Swinton. The standing portrait of Robert Louis Stevenson cuts deep into the imagination. Such a frail, blonde, slight young man to have brought the greatest adventure books of the world into being. He looks more rightfully the author of the verse and essays, which have also played a part in endearing him to the hearts of all readers.

And then, in time, from the portraits we turn for a longer look at the "Venetian Bead Stringers," the "Venetian Glass Workers," the "Moorish Courtyard," "The Interior," and "Cypresses and Pines," and the rest. They make a splendid sample, but not more than a sample of Sargent's vast exercise of paint. Some day, somewhere—here it may be, we hope—may a larger retrospective exhibit of his work be gathered together, so the enjoyment of it will be less tantalizing.

How to Wave Hair to Appear Naturally Curly

Apply a little liquid Silmerine with a clean tooth brush just before doing up the hair. This will impart a bright lustre suggestive of "hidden sunshine," and the hair will have a delightful wave, perfectly natural in appearance, that will last many days. It will prove beneficial to the hair, instead of making it brittle and dead-looking as the hot iron does. Instead of your tresses being mean and contrary, you will find them quite easy to do up in any form, and there will be no odor, grease or stickiness about the hair. Ask your druggist for a few ounces of the liquid Silmerine (costs about 20c an ounce).

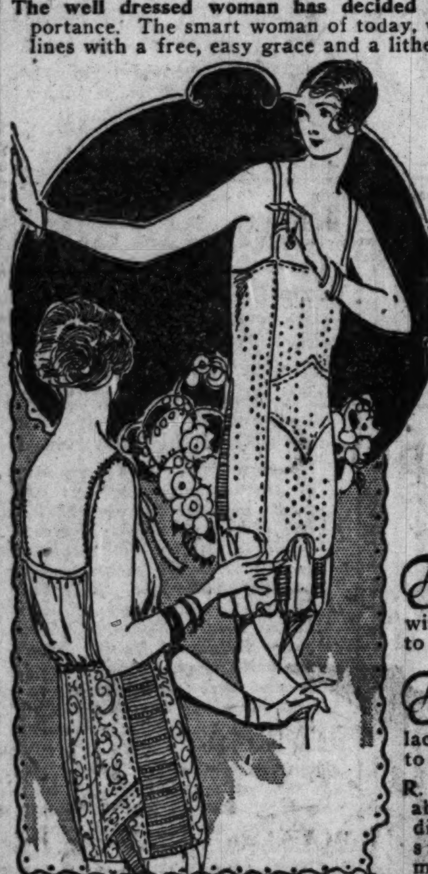
Perhaps You Need Corsets Again

—Third Floor—Dearborn Street—

The well dressed woman has decided that corsets are again of supreme importance. The smart woman of today, whether 16 or 60, must have straight figure lines with a free, easy grace and a litheness of motion that formerly were attributes of youth only. To acquire this figure and grace she must be corseted and of course the corset must fit correctly and be comfortable. Women have learned that going uncorseted has made their figures rather heavy.



A special showing of the New Corseting tomorrow by Mme. Gumbould from the Binner Factories and designing staff who will give short talks on how to get the longer and slimmer lines demanded by present fashions.

Mme. Gumbould can be consulted tomorrow and every day this week from 10 a. m. to 12 m. and from 1 to 4 p. m. Bring your corset troubles to her—she is here to help you and has the new Binner closed back corsets—also the R. & G. "Shadow Form" with a unique diaphragm control—that is very interesting—to show you. They may be just the garment that your figure requires.

Headlines Tell the Latest News of Shadowland

York, Baby Peggy, Priscilla Dean, Thelma Morgan Converse, Ben Lyon, Al and Charley Christie, Florence Vidor, and a host of friends crowded around Anita and her mother.

There were orchids in Anita's corsage and tears in her eyes.

"Maybe I'll get off at Pasadena," she threatened. "I'll come back and you'll be surprised how soon."

Before Anita left George Fitzmaurice gave her a dinner party at his home. Corinne Griffith and Walter Morosco, Eddie Carewe, and Pauline Garon, Leatrice Joy and Jack Gilbert, Bert Lytell, Claire Windsor, Cedric Gibbons, Florence Vidor, and Kathryn Hill were there. Miss Stewart wore peach colored chiffon and gardenias. Corinne Griffith was in shell pink embroidered in iridescent beads. Florence Vidor was in white.

There was an Hawaiian orchestra. No Hollywod party is complete without one just now.

Miss Dupont filed her bankruptcy plea under the name of Patty Hannan. Her liabilities were listed at $2,748.80. She has no assets.

Virginia Pearson and her husband, Sheldon Lewis, who are living at the Hollywood hotel, filed a joint petition. The couple owes nearly $10,000, mostly in doctor bills. Sometime ago Miss Pearson was in an auto accident that necessitated having her face remodeled.

But, at that, bankruptcy isn't so bad. We remember when Mae Busch was declared a bankrupt. Right after the avowal Mae got herself a nice job as leading lady. The last we saw of her she was wearing a glittering diamond ring and a gorgeous ermine cloak, the badge of stardom.

Thomas Ince's preview party brought forth Mr. and Mrs. Charley Ray, Marshall Neilan, and Blanche Sweet, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Pola Negri, Eugene O'Brien, Marilynn Miller and Jack Pickford, and Mack Sennett. After the picture, "The Marriage Cheat," Mr. and Mrs. Ince gave a supper dance at their Benedict Canyon home.

Elinor Glyn was hostess, Lew Cody master of ceremonies, Aileen Pringle the guest of honor at the opening of "Three Weeks" on Saturday night. Mme. Glyn spoke on love, a subject on which she is an acknowledged expert. The guests were Charlie Chaplin, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil de Mille, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Lasky, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Neilan, Mr. and Mrs. Antonio Moreno, Mr. and Mrs. Derek Glyn, King Vidor, Joe Jackson, and Craig Biddle. After the performance Mme. Glyn gave a supper party at the Ambassador for her daughter and son-in-law, Sir Rhys and Lady Williams.

Alice Terry says her husband, Rex Ingram, has kept long distance busy since she has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Taiffe. Mr. Ingram is in New York editing his picture. Alice's 8 year old Arabian adopted son has learned twelve words in English since he came to Hollywood. Alice speaks to him in French and Mrs. Taiffe wonders what it is all about.

Old Dot-an'-Carry One

Dot-step! Dot-step! Right up th' hill,
  Dot-step! Dot-step!—an'down
He goes, when ever'thing is still
  At night, all over town.
We hear him of a rainy night—
  Ol' Dot-an'-carry-one—
A-trudin', peerin' left an' right,
  A-lookin' fer his son.

His boy went over at th' start—
  Went over there, an' stayed.
They'd never been a day apart,
  An' seems like that's what made
Ol' Dot-an'-carry-one get queer
  An' live his life this way—
He seeks at night both far an' near
  An' sets around all day.

He sets all day, half in a doze,
  Sets facin' his front door—
He can't quite get it, I suppose,
  His boy won't come no more.
An' in th' summertime he'll wait
  Outside, out in th' sun,
Or sometimes watch beside th' gate—
  Ol' Dot-an'-carry-one.

But it's at night—a rainy night!—
  Seems like, he worries more.
Th' swishin' rain, no odds how light,
  Sounds like a stormy shore,
An' he gets out an' tromps th' town
  To find that boy o' his.
We hear him, dottin' up an' down
  An' whisper: "There he is!"

They say th' angels all use wings,
  But this is my idee:
That when we find them crowns an' things
  That this is what we'll see:
Th' ol' man, happy at th' last,
  A-walkin' with his son,
An' angels smilin', when they've passed:
"Ol' Dot-an'-carry-one!"

Entirely Too Familiar.

We all call our manager "Papa."

It was past his usual time to go out for lunch and his chauffeur was standing near the vault waiting for him.

I came in and in an unusually loud voice said, "What's the matter with Papa? Isn't he going out for lunch today?"

Imagine my feelings when at that time out of the vault walked Papa!

Fair Warning.

It happened while I was a cashier in a large drug store in my old home town.

At intervals I found time to read, and was so engrossed one day in an article entitled "How to Attract Men" that I did not notice one of the clerks, a young man, looking over my shoulder until he exclaimed: "Boys, we will have to watch our step with this young lady! She's reading all about how to attract men."

Imagine how I felt, with all that bunch of boys looking at me laughing.

THE BEST JOKE I EVER HEARD

Ups and Downs.

A notoriously absent minded man was observed walking down the street with one foot continually in the gutter, the other on the pavement.

A friend meeting him said: "Good evening. How are you?"

"Well," replied the absent minded one, "I thought I was well when I left home, but now I don't know what's the matter with me! I've been limping for the last half-hour."

R. C.

Hadn't Shown Up.

"Eliza," said the mistress to her washerwoman, "have you seen Miss Edith's fiancé?"

Eliza pondered for a moment, then bent over the laundry tub once more.

"No ma'am," she said, "it ain't been in the wash yet."

YOU NEED NOT BE BALD!

If so, come in and consult with me. I have specialized in diseases of the scalp for 20 years. My scalp treatments are indorsed by some of Chicago's leading business and professional men.

I make no charge for consultation and examination. Hours 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Hair Often Ruined By Careless Washing

Soap should be used very carefully, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Many soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much free alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo, which is pure and greaseless, and is better than anything else you can use.

Two or three teaspoonfuls is sufficient to cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy, wavy, and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at any drug store; it is inexpensive, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

Losing sleep, night workers suffer three times as many accidents

No factory safety device equals normal sleep. A recent government inquiry shows that the same men, on the night shift in steel mills, suffer three times as many injuries as when they toil by day.

Working by artificial light is partly responsible. But disturbed and broken sleep by day, failing to rebuild the physical vigor and mental energy spent each night, is chiefly to blame for the accidents.

Study of the facts will convince you that the restoring power of sleep depends largely on its depth—that your body must be entirely comfortable if you are to tap the richest veins of rest.

You can easily determine whether your bedding provides such comfort. Take a few minutes tonight to examine it. Then compare it with the Simmons mattresses and springs at your furniture dealer's.

There are many styles for you to choose from and the prices are the lowest that bedding made of safe, new materials can be bought for. Decide for yourself whether sleep is worth their modest cost.

stream go by. With Mr. Stock it is always as though one were being swept along by the stream past a given point. I believe it is due entirely to a difference in the conductors' manner of regarding their music. Both visitors seemed to concentrate upon one detail, one episode, and then pass to the next for similar concentration. Mr. Stock always gives the impression of concentrating upon the composition as a whole, with each episode fitted in its relative importance to the other episodes. This by no means hints that Mr. Stock is slack over details. On the contrary, no one is ever more insistent. But neither is there anything hit or miss over his interpretations.

The Season's Record.

A glance at the records of Mr. Stock in his non-operatic functions this season will show a wide range. When this week's programs are finished, 141 works from the pens of seventy-seven composers will have been played. Thirty-eight of these pieces appeared on the symphony programs for the first time, though there need be no inference that these newcomers were necessarily new works, since four were by Johann Sebastian Bach, one by Karl Philip Emanuel Bach, two by Handel, one by Mozart, and one by Domenico Scarlatti.

Mr. Stock makes a practice of encouraging American composers when he can find distinctive talent. He has been known to say he is for the American musician though not for the American amateur, a phrase that is worth pondering. American compositions of value were not numerous this season, though twelve were played, and one of these, Leo Sowerby's Ballade for two pianos and orchestra, seemed to have the flame of a big achievement. The only trouble with it was that it can not be played except in cases when Guy Maier and Lee Pattison are on hand.

Of the nineteen soloists of the season, the pianists were far in the preponderance. There were ten of them, with Wanda Landowska introducing the harpsichord as well as the piano. There were three violin soloists, one specialist of the viola, two cellists, two singers, and one harpist.

Unfamiliar with Leisure.

During the active season of twenty-eight weeks Mr. Stock found time to go to Philadelphia for a week with the orchestra there, meanwhile turning over the Chicago organization to the excellent assistant conductor, Eric De Lamarter, break his arm while there, and engage in a season of left handed conducting with Mr. De Lamarter as occasional substitute. This makes no mention of trips with the orchestra to Milwaukee, Aurora, the University of Chicago, and elsewhere, nor of his and Mr. De Lamarter's fine service to American music in the Civic orchestra of Chicago, which would need a separate article of its own to discuss completely. At any rate, Mr. Stock would seem to have devoted but little time to the folded hands of contemplation.

For his final concerts Mr. Stock schedules the third "Lenore" overture by Beethoven, the fourth Brahms symphony, Debussy's "Iberia," and two Wagner excerpts, the "Ride of the Valkyries," from "Die Walküre," and the "Tannhäuser" overture. The Thursday night "pop" will include Chabrier's "Joyeuse Marche," the overture to Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C major, Dvorak's scherzo capriccioso, Hellmesberger's arrangement of Meyseder's ball scene, the Strauss waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," and Elgar's march, "Pomp and Circumstance."

SOLOISTS

IRENE PAVLOSKA. [Daguerre Photo.]

They are two of the many musicians to be heard this week. Both will be at Orchestra hall. Mr. Preston is one of the soloists in Max Bruch's "The Lay of the Bell," which will be sung by the Marshall Field & Company Choral society on Wednesday night. Miss Pavloska will sing several groups of songs and also the solo part in "Inflammatus," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater," with the Association of Commerce Glee club.

Notes of the Musicians

Seventeen years ago, says a note from the Marshall Field & Co. Choral society, the organization started as a male chorus of the talented members of the company's baseball team. A concert was given for the purpose of raising the money to pay for its suits and bats in the summer season.

From that beginning it has grown to its present dimensions, a mixed chorus of several hundred with its regular conductor, rating as one of the best mixed choruses in the city, which hires its soloists and 55 members of the Chicago Symphony orchestra to play its scores, gives annual concerts at Orchestra hall, and successfully finances the operation.

On Wednesday night of this week the organization will present Max Bruch's "The Lay of the Bell," under the direction of Thomas A. Pape. The soloists will be Anna Burmeister, soprano; Mina Hager, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Howard E. Preston, baritone, and Allen W. Bogen, organist. Catherine Howard-Ward is the accompanist. It will be Miss Burmeister's first public appearance since her marriage, and Miss Hager's last before departing for a concert tour in Europe.

Further details regarding the diamond jubilee of the North American Sängerbunds at the Coliseum give word of three concerts to be held on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, June 11, 12, and 13. The opening performance will be featured by a mixed chorus of 3,000 and a male chorus of 1,500. The next afternoon there will be a mixed chorus of 3,000 and a male chorus of 4,000. The final event speaks of a children's chorus of 4,000 with a special setting of James Whitcomb Riley's "When Evening Shadows Fall," composed by Edward Strubel of Covington, Ky.

The greater part of the programs will be made up of German songs drawn from folk lore, romances, comic ballads, and peasant songs. Emmy Krueger, Kathryn Meisle, and Alexander Kipnis will be the soloists, the first making her first appearance here, the two others from the Chicago Civic Opera company's forces. There will be further assistance from the Chicago Symphony orchestra and Mr. Stock.

The Lindblom High school will present an operetta all its own next week, "The Dream Girl" by William M. Mason and Esther Goetz, music teachers. The cast will include 100, accompanied by a sixty piece orchestra. All costumes, properties, scenery and programs have been made by students. The dramatic action is in charge of Mary E. Courtenay and the costumes are designed by Anna Prang Kniehans.

Next Sunday evening Cathal O'Byrne, Irish tenor, who confines himself exclusively to the singing of Irish folk songs, will give a recital in the Sovereign hotel. On the program with him will be Miss Anne Larkin, who will read selections from Mr. O'Byrne's book of Irish poetry, "The Grey Feet of the Wind." Mr. O'Byrne is resuming a concert tour of America cut short last fall by the necessity of his return to Ireland because of the serious illness of his sister there. He wears an ancient Irish bardic costume in his recitals.

A recital for the benefit of the Welsh Old Peoples' home of Cleveland is being arranged by representatives of that land in Chicago for next Sunday afternoon at Kimball hall. Mrs. Gwennie Williams Evans and William Davies will be the participants. Evan Evans, who sends word of the event to this department, states that there is a large scattered Welsh population in the United States, and those whose parents were born in Wales are trying to look after the old and needy members of their race so that they may have some comfort in their adopted country, also that they may not be objects of public charity.

A bulletin from the Chicago Civic Opera company tells of the engagement of Antonio Cortis, Spanish tenor, also that the time for renewing seat subscriptions for next season has been extended one month to May 15.

The Polish Opera club of Milwaukee, which came to the Auditorium last fall to present "Halka," will make a return visit on the night of May 4, this time to sing "Martha."

The Theodore Thomas memorial will be dedicated next Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock. The dedication exercises will take place in Orchestra hall, and will consist of a musical program by the Chicago Symphony orchestra under Mr. Stock's direction; an address on the life and work of Theodore Thomas by Charles H. Hamill, president of the Orchestral association; presentation of the memorial by Charles L. Hutchinson, president of the B. F. Ferguson Monument fund and its acceptance by Edward J Kelly, president of the south park commissioners. Immediately thereafter the memorial will be unveiled in Grant park, a few steps south of the Art institute. Albin Polasek is the sculptor and Howard Shaw the architect.

USE IT EVERY DAY!

It Is Your Personal Guide to Health and Beauty

Before you dress in the morning or before you jump into bed at night, you should ask the Health-o-Meter what your weight is. The Health-o-Meter, the Automatic Bathroom Scale, is your guide to health and beauty. GUESSING is a most dangerous practice where the question is one so vital to your success, your life, and your happiness. Know your weight daily—the Health-o-Meter tells you.

Every member of the family needs it. Do they know the progress of dieting, exercising, treatments, massages, baths, etc.? Medical authorities insist that you watch your weight as a guide to Health, Beauty and Success. Did you ever see a hospital or prominent physician's office that didn't have a weighing scale? Even the life insurance companies put great stress on the value of proper weight. YOUR weight indicates your health, your bodily condition. Get the health-building habit, weigh yourself daily in your own home—on the Health-o-Meter.

WOMEN

For a beautiful figure, a healthy body, a charming, forceful personality — WATCH YOUR WEIGHT! Your diets, exercises, etc., are useless unless you KNOW your weight daily. Health-o-Meter charts show just what your weight should be at your age, and the Health-o-Meter gives you an accurate daily guide to health and beauty.

MEN

All men admire and all men want a strong, healthy, beautiful physique. You know it spells success for you, but you must KNOW your weight daily instead of guessing. You cannot expect results from treatments, exercising, etc., unless you use the Health-o-Meter daily in your home; weigh without clothes—it is the only correct WEIGH.

CHILDREN

All parents have this tremendous responsibility of directing the child to Health, Beauty and Happiness. Abnormal weight is the danger signal of Health. It may mean one of several unhealthy body conditions. It is important—even vital—to KNOW and not guess the weight of your children. Weigh them daily in your home—on the Health-o-Meter.

"NAMELESS" SET BEARS UP WELL UNDER HARD TEST

New Wiring Diagram Aid to Attic Builder.

BY STEPHEN GILCHRIST.
[Radio Editor.]

One naturally is prone to enthusiasm over the performances of a receiver that has grown under his hands from an array of prosaic and inanimate "parts" into an inexhaustible fount of poetry of sound. And the "veteran attic builder" is no different in that respect than the novice. At first the enthusiasm is measureless and sometimes unreasonably insistent; gradually it wears down, and finally one may find stealing in a note of criticism or of deprecation. That's the point of double corrosion—corrosion of enthusiasm and of contacts. It's a quite common mental and mechanical affliction, and has shelved many an honest receiver.

Evolves New System.

For you who build sets of any description without adequate knowledge of just how to go about the wiring, except to follow it from contact to contact, or from nucleus to contacts of any given circuit, there is promise of a new day and a new hope of efficiency simply arrived at.

With the befogged novice in mind, Harry A. Bremer, designer of the "Nameless Circuit," to whose engineering ability are due many forward steps in receivers, virtually has completed a wiring system, applicable not only to the circuit at issue but also to many others, which will be published in this department next Sunday. That ought to save stamps for many who are determined to build, but who can't quite master the actual intent of this or of that in a schematic drawing. And there are lots of us in that class. Yes, us is right! But next week the electrical shark may as well wipe from his countenance that expression of superiority.

Present Method Splendid.

Already much has been done by the Bremer-Tully company toward making construction a safer and saner home sport, especially in the "step by step tested on the air" plan. Last week the reader was left with a faultless detector circuit tested and the way cleared for one step after the other of audio. But there it wasn't quite so lovely. An open circuit filament control jack had been recumbent in one of our radio chests so long that its presence had been forgotten. But it was recalled very vigorously when the first stage audio was put into action. It minimized instead of amplifying.

Previously the job had been tackled with rather an open mind as to whether the idea ought to be set down as a very desirable "beginners' must." When it took just a couple minutes to locate that filament control jack trying to masquerade as a double circuit the Bremer-Tully idea had won hands down. From then on it was clear sailing. The second audio was built and tested, and the work of assembling the first stage of radio tackled. This completed, antenna and ground were hooked on, the dials turned—and Dallas, clear and strong, swept the apartment with an orchestral number. WFAA never had sounded better. That was enough, and the receiver was completed.

Since then splendid results have been obtained from this circuit, built as the novice necessarily would build it.

Tests Somewhat Hampered.

Real distance tests have been impossible lately because of press of work, static, and the fact that where the tests are conducted, under somewhat more trying conditions than obtain in the home of the average city-bound builder, the boss of the ranch insists on the loud speakers being put to bed at 11 p. m. sharp. Sometimes on Saturday nights, one is allowed to sing or talk until 11:30. If you know what static means in the headphones with two stages of audio helping to accentuate the electrical rock crushers' chorus, you can understand that pulling in KFI and KPO, each on two different occasions, wasn't altogether a musical treat.

Some of the things accomplished include: Davenport last Sunday afternoon on two stages so strong that it could easily be heard a block away and with absolutely no distortion. This was with two Erla audio transformers—each 3½ to 1 ratio—and using a Thorophone loud speaker. With a Holtzer-Cabot the volume was not so great, but the tone was as pure.

Fine Audio Results.

Little difference seemed apparent in using 6 to 1 in the first stage of audio. Equal results were obtained with All-American transformers, when used with 5 to 1 in the first stage and the lower ratio in the second, and with the two lower ratio—3 to 1—in both stages. There may have been a difference, but it was not apparent to the ear.

However, little real acquaintance with possible volume has been had in any tests yet, as the second stage has been used rarely because of too great volume. St. Louis and Davenport have been heard in the early afternoon in daytime on one stage, with sufficient volume in both the Holtzer-Cabot and the Thorophone to satisfy any one.

Last Monday night was a miserable one in the writer's neighborhood because of violation of silent hours by a spark set and also because of the squealers. The latter are such persistent offenders that owners of nonradiating sets may be found ere long expounding the utter folly of silent night in Chicago, under present circumstances. That might be a good idea, at that. For my part the only nights of late when distance is worth going after are those nights when the local stations have the sqealers suppressed.

Thirty Stations Logged.

However, from 8 p. m. until 2:30, thirty stations were logged, with static rather severe, to say nothing of the peace disturbers. A real treat came at 1:30 a. m. Fishing aimlessly, KFKB, "the Early Bird," came in so strong on one stage of audio that the headphones had to be put far in front of the ears and finally the audio cut out. Somewhat was due to the cleared air, somewhat to the power of the "Early Bird," and the rest to the efficiency of the Nameless Circuit, in the fact that I was able to listen to KFKB's contest over "selection of a name for the red-headed leader of the Sun-kissed Syncopaters," interspersed with some fair musical numbers, for a full hour with all the volume any one would crave in the headphones with the audio inactive. KFKB is at Milford, Kas.

Repeatedly WLW, WSAI, WLAG, WFAA, WGY, KDKA, KFKX, WSB, WMC, and WDAF have been put on the loud speaker on one stage with locals on. Saturday week WLAG had right of way for more than an hour with never a suspicion that WTAS, WLS, WDAP, W-G-N, WMAQ [for a while] and KYW were going full tilt.

Clearing Up Some Points.

Several letters have been received from puzzled radioans who desire to construct the "nameless circuit." For the benefit of those who may be in doubt as to any points, questions of general interest will be answered in this column. For those wishing personal replies, stamped, self-addressed envelopes should accompany questions. The following have been received:

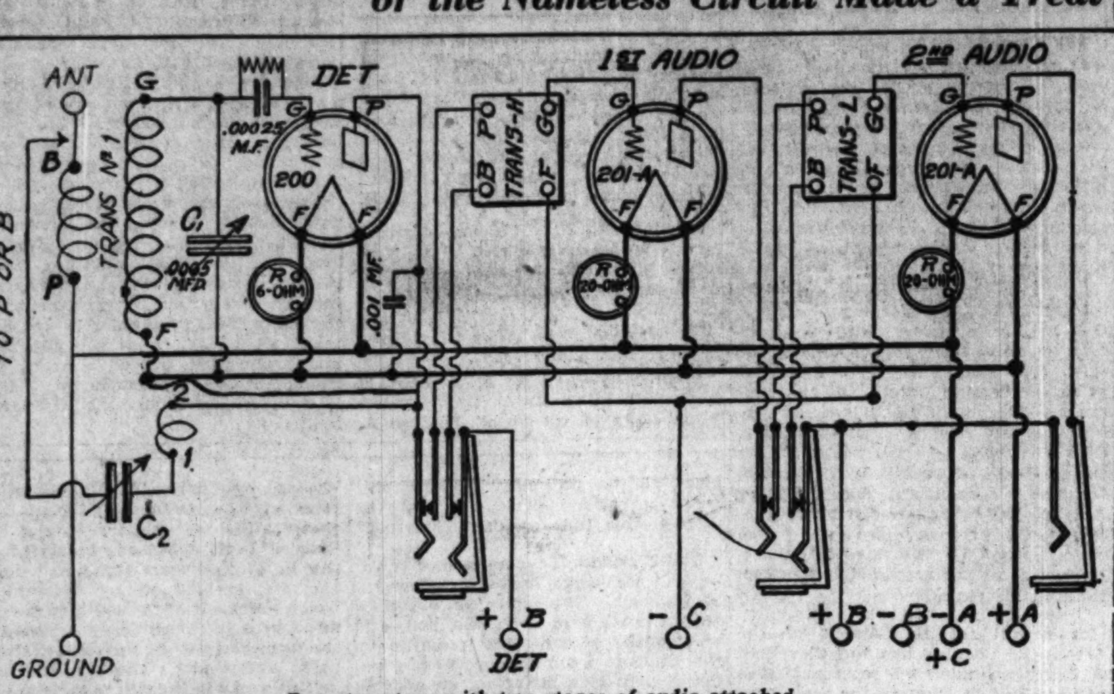
Question.—In diagram of April 6 you show rotor of C-1 condenser connected to A plus lead, while rotors of other condensers are connected to negative lead. Why is this?

Answer.—Soft tube is used with rheostat in positive A leg; hence, grid return is connected to positive A lead. In event hard tube is used for detector, rheostat may be placed in negative lead, with grid return to negative filament lead, although better results are obtained by following diagram.

Question.—In April 13 issue you mention second stage audio jack as controlling filament to second audio tube. Wiring diagram shows this jack connected only to second tube plate and to plus B 90.

Answer.—Jack shown in wiring diagram is open circuit jack with only two contacts. Open circuit filament control jack has two extra contacts for A minus lead to jack and to rheostat controlling last tube. This automatically shuts current from last tube when jack plug is withdrawn.

Wiring Audio Stages and First Radio of the Nameless Circuit Made a Treat



Detector stage with two stages of audio attached.

Detector and preceding stage of radio frequency. The completed receiver in photograph and schematic diagram form already has been printed. For those who wish to follow the more symmetrically balanced receiver (in appearance) the diagram with the audio transformers on either side of the baseboard may be employed. For the sticklers for short leads the spacing should provide for their being placed in succession.

POLITICAL TRICK SEEN IN SECOND A. R. R. L. BALLOT

Third Vote on Director Regarded Certain

Detroit, Mich., April 19.—[Special.]—The hand of radicalism has gotten a political grip in the affairs of the central division, Amateur Radio Relay league, according to charges made by the conservative element of the league, headed by Clyde E. Darr of this city. Moreover, the charges contend, the radical element has employed political trickers to gain the upper hand in the election of a director to represent the central division, comprising the states of Illinois, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin, at league headquarters in Hartford, Conn.

Darr on First Ballot.

Four candidates were in the field for this office, but the fight soon narrowed down to Darr, at present assistant division manager for the state of Michigan, and C. N. Crapo of Milwaukee. Crapo's candidacy was pushed by the Amateurs' Radio club of Milwaukee. While Crapo was a newcomer in the amateur field the club went after the office full tilt.

League elections are made by means of sealed ballots sent to each member through the mails. After the count showed Darr an overwhelming victor, complaint was made to league headquarters that the ballot was irregular because the Milwaukee candidate's name had not been entered properly on the ballot. Due to this complaint, a second ballot was sent out from headquarters.

Third Vote Is Demanded.

According to Darr's campaign managers, it has developed that the majority of amateurs in the central division, assuming the second ballot had been sent out through error, failed to vote a second time—except the Milwaukee contingent and their followers, which made returns of 100 per cent.

The Darr managers have lodged complaint with league headquarters and demanded a third ballot after complete explanation to members in the central division. They intimate that the error in entering Crapo's name on the first ballot was intentional, pointing out that this would be quite possible in view of the fact that each candidate supplied the information as to his qualifications, etc., as printed on the original ballot.

Crapo's Backers Deny Coup.

In response to telegraphic inquiry as to the charges made by the Detroit contingent, THE TRIBUNE received the following wire from the Milwaukee Radio Amateurs' club:

"According to Charles Service, assistant secretary of the league, C. N. Crapo's correct position and record were omitted from the first ballot through regrettable oversight. The second ballot was issued in the interest of fair play. No coup was intended. Reballoting was not demanded by the Milwaukee constituents, complaints merely being entered at headquarters calling attention to the error and asking an explanation. The second ballot was the result of the action of the executive committee of the league.

"A third ballot would make the election a farce and decrease the number of votes cast. It is not necessary, but is not opposed, however, by the Milwaukee contingent. We are satisfied with our part of the ballot, and while it remains we are not interested in a third ballot."

Dental hygiene is the subject of talks broadcast for fifteen minutes each Tuesday evening by Radio CKY, Winnipeg, Man.

150 AMATEURS ACT TO SHOW UP "BLACK SHEEP"

Air Soon to Be Clear of Offenders.

(In the reply last Sunday of F. H. Schnell to the letter assailing amateurs a typographical error made it appear that silent hours for amateurs in the central district are from 7 to 10:30, whereas it is 8 to 10:30 p. m. Monday night is no exception.—Ed.)

One hundred and fifty of Chicago's most prominent radio amateurs, members of the Chicago Radio Traffic association, met Thursday night to take steps for elimination of unlawful operation of transmitting sets.

This was an immediate result of the letter written by a broadcast listener, and the reply, in defense of the amateur, written by F. H. Schnell of the American Radio Relay league, published the last two Sundays in the Radio department of THE TRIBUNE.

Offenses Are Admitted.

It was generally admitted at the meeting that a small percentage of the city's transmitting stations were causing unnecessary interference which was being blamed on the radio amateur as a class. A general warning to clean house, not only among themselves but also with any other stations which were testing and tuning between 8 and 10:30 p. m., was given by R. H. G. Mathews, central division manager for the league.

Much of this testing was unwittingly done, he said, but was due to only a small number who either ignorantly or maliciously gave the broadcast listener a bad opinion of all amateurs.

The latter part of the meeting was given over to a talk made by Lawrence Lesh, one of the designers and builders of station WDAP. He explained many of the problems which came up in the handling of such a high powered station and showed how the methods of eliminating such difficulties could be applied to amateur transmitters as well. One of the most interesting details of his talk dealt with the time when that station radiated twenty-four distinct wave lengths and showed how they were cut down to the half dozen or so now in use [short wave harmonics].

B. L.'s Invited to Meetings.

The meeting closed with a general invitation extended to broadcast listeners to bring their interference problems to the association for clearing up, rather than to hold a perpetual grudge against the amateur. The C. R. T. A. meets the first and third Thursdays of each month in Room 1014, County building, at 8 p. m. Only representatives of licensed transmitting stations are eligible to full membership, but all others interested in radio are invited to engage in discussions. A radio engineer of prominence speaks at each meeting.

Bremer to Discuss Nameless Circuit at Electric Club

Harry A. Bremer, inventor of the Nameless circuit, and J. H. Whitehead, representing the Universal Battery company, will be the speakers before the radio section of the Electric club at its meeting in the rooms at the Hotel Morrison on Tuesday evening. Mr. Bremer will discuss his latest creation in receivers, while Mr. Whitehead will talk on storage bateries and their relation to radio. The usual discussion of apparatus will be handled by Allan C. Forbes.

TODAY'S RADIO PROGRAMS

(Sunday, April 20.) (Central Time Throughout.)

Those who turn on the loud speaker or adjust the headphone this evening are assured a highly interesting program from W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, Zenith broadcasting station. For not only will a musical program of classical numbers be presented by four artists of note, but President Walter Dill Scott of Northwestern university will deliver a speech.

President Scott, an orator of note, will talk in behalf of the fund being gathered for the purchase for Chicago of the Washington portrait by Stuart now on exhibition at the Art istitute. But his address will not be confined to a dry boost for more money. He will sketch the history of the famous painting and talk on the Americanism so closely knit into the times of Washington and Stuart.

Zelma Smithpeter, a coloratura soprano of remarkable ability, will sing. Weldon Whitlock, tenor, will give several selections. Helen Rau, pianist, and Lillian Rehberg, cellist, will play, and the Oriole orchestra will provide a program of concert selections.

LOW LOSS TUNER SELECTIVE AND HAS FAR REACH

Set Gets Distance Under Station's Shadow.

BY FRED MARCO.

[Of Experimental Station 9XBA.]

[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

Unbelievably loud, powerful signals with a wallop behind 'em, knifelike selectivity that makes you forget all about local interference, simplicity and ease of adjustment that defies all comers, together with low cost, utter reliability, and a freedom from strong radiation—that's the low loss tuner!

"The ideal receiver?" you say. Perhaps, and then perhaps not; but this principle of design which has so recently swept the amateur radio field off its feet, most assuredly will accomplish all of these things and more, and is certainly a great step towards the "ultimate receiver."

Saving of Energy Aim.

We all know that we have a certain amount of energy picked up by our receiving system (antenna or loop) available for conversion into audible signals. Now, obviously, a system of conversion which will use the greatest part of this energy to the best advantage, at the same time losing as little as possible in the process, will give us the loudest response. It is hard to increase the amount of energy which we can pick up out of the ether without running into further difficulties, for, if we increase the size of the antenna beyond a reasonable limit, we immediately lose some of our selectivity and pick up more static. Therefore, it is necessary to use a design of tuning apparatus which will waste as little of this precious energy as possible.

The question of losses in grid circuits of vacuum tubes has long been a fascinating one to radio engineers striving for something a little better, and the ideas to be presented in this and succeeding articles on the low loss tuner are not the result of any one individual's work along this line, but rather the fruit of concerted effort by many of the leading lights of the field. It is not the purpose to lay down hard and fast rules as to circuits, sizes, and number of turns of wire, etc., but rather to show how the general principles of low loss construction can be applied to the design of any radio set, therefore allowing the greatest number to benefit thereby.

Problem One of Resistance.

Losses of energy are caused, primarily, by resistance in the tuned circuits connected to the grid and filament or "input" circuit of the radio frequency tube (the detector tube is a radio frequency tube), or by resistances "coupled into" these circuits by neighboring high resistance circuits. By "resistance" in these statements is meant not only the mere ohmic or direct current resistance such as is commonly used with reference to rheostats and the like, but the actual "hindrance" to the flow of radio frequency energy in the coils and associated condensers. For every little bit that we can decrease this resistance, a decrease in loss and therefore an increase in signal strength is the result. At the same time we sharpen the tuning—or increase the selectivity —for it is one of the fundamental laws of electrical theory that a high resistance circuit will not tune sharply. Kruse, one of the foremost radio engineers of the day, technical editor of "Q.S.T.," attaches so much importance to the thoughts contained in that last sentence that he repeats it three times and then underlines it in a recent article on the subject.

It certainly is of the utmost importance to every user of a receiving set, for if a little more attention had been paid to this one fact, when the set was designed, its owner would cease to complain of local interference! Remember that! A high resistance circuit will not tune sharply!

Can Cut Down Losses.

The beauty of the whole thing is that we can greatly lower these resistances by proper methods of winding coils, by the use of proper winding forms and correct wire insulations, by avoiding coil dopes which have detrimental effects, by choosing variable condensers designed with the ideas of "low-loss" foremost, by avoiding "molded mud" parts and lastly, by incorporating this correct apparatus into an aggregate arrangement which will allow of it acting to the greatest advantage. All these phases of the game will be taken up in succeeding issues of this column, it being the primary purpose of this particular article to first fix in the mind of the experimenter the fundamentals involved.

The ordinary forms of straight regenerative circuit are the ones best adapted to the simpler types of low loss tuners. It is seen by reference to the diagram that nothing new in the way of hookups is presented, this particular one being the old familiar tickler feed back regenerator. No circuit constants are given, inasmuch as these are all in themselves important and must be taken up step by step; for, in order to obtain the ultimate in results, attention to the smallest details is necessary.

There are only two controls to the whole thing—the secondary tuning condenser, which regulates the wave length of the circuits, and the tickler coupling, or other regenerative device, which regulates the amount of feedback and, therefore, the volume of the signal. The antenna coupling is variable, but seldom adjusted, and no tuning controls are used in this circuit. This quickly disposes of the problem of simplicity.

Radiation Almost Negligible.

The question of sharp tuning we have already discussed, and the comparatively low cost of the parts is obvious, since the coils are necessarily home made and the condenser—a good one—can be obtained for a fairly low figure.

Radiation from this type of set is so small as to be almost negligible, for in the first place best signals are obtained with the set adjusted below the oscillation point, and, even if the circuit is allowed to oscillate, the antenna, or radiating system, because it is so loosely coupled and so far detuned, will pick up only a very small portion of the energy of oscillation from the grid circuit.

"And now," you ask, "how about signal strength?" The best answer to that can be found by perusing the reports of the last trans-Atlantic reception tests run, during December and January, by the American Radio Relay league. Practically all of the successful contestants in this test, and there were many of them, used tuners incorporating these principles of design, but of course adapted for shorter wave lengths.

A tuner—the first one of the "low loss" type ever built at 9XBA—repeatedly has put good strong signals from English, French, and Dutch stations, using less than 500 watts power, on a loud speaker here in Chicago.

One of a later design picks up both coasts of the United States right through Chicago's most powerful broadcasting station — two blocks away! Selectivity? Volume? Use a low loss tuner!

DIAGRAM OF LOW LOSS TUNE

ECHOES OF THE HEAD PHONES

BY ELMER DOUGLAS.

"All things change."

Mrs. Humphrey Ward's philosophical platitude is but a lame expression of the chaotic and rapidly changing situation in radio, locally—particularly in Chicago—and nationally, personally with the writer, and quite likely personally with you, if you are a radio listener.

Perhaps it might be helpful to turn the dial of time back a few years—just a few years.

Do you remember that historic night three years ago when KYW opened its studio with an operatic performance? I don't.

Do you remember the night that WDAP broke out on the air from their "makeshift studio," as J. Elliott Jenkins lovingly calls it, in the Wrigley building two years ago? I don't.

In fact, previously to September 1922, I would have kicked harder than any mule and made more noise had any one tried to harness me up in head phones—and I'd fight harder now to keep any one from taking them away from me. And with only a year and a half's experience I feel like an old man in the game.

Changes? Do you remember when KYW was for months almost lost to the world while they were broadcasting on 345 meters? Do you remember the unsatisfactory signals from WMAQ not so long ago when they were on 400 meters? How many Chicagoans are there to whom call letters WSAH and WPAD mean anything?

Zelma Smithpeter, coloratura soprano, who sings on the W-G-N artist series program this evening.

A brief history of the three years of radio broadcasting in Chicago would fill a good sized book, and its pages would be filled with long chapters of dark and hopeless weeks and months; other chapters would be symbolic of all the grandeur of the joy and marvels of this wonder invention of the age.

Having grown up with this constantly shifting scene, I am prepared to face with composure the W-G-N, WDAP, and WLS complication, knowing that the efforts of interested men and time will solve the problem, and that there will emerge a new era in radio for Chicagoans—ideal beyond our wildest dreams.

To shift from the theoretical to thoughts more tangible and practical.

Weldon Whitlock, tenor of the artist program from The Tribune, Zenith station tonight.

Summer is approaching, and old man static already has begun his usual summer's labors. He's going to have his own way about it, too. Static eliminators may put an end to him some day, but not today.

In the meantime, there are several things that might be done to ease and help the listener. Recent Monday nights have revealed that many stations are lax about giving their call letters at frequent intervals. Take it all in all, there is nothing on any program more important than the call letters.

Not only should call letters be given after every number, whatever it may be, but some day some thoughtful station, to their honor and glory, will discover a way to sandwich in the station's call letters during long addresses and dinner speeches. Most public speakers take a glass of water occasionally.

Another thought. It is the custom during diversified concert programs to preface the composition with the name of the artist, the composition, and the composer's name. Occasionally, but only occasionally, this is repeated after rendition. Since it is only after the number has been heard that its interest to the listener is known, it would seem that some station profitably might try the experiment of repeating this oftentimes desired information after every number. There are those who like to carry in the repository of their minds the name of favorite compositions, others keep written records of them, and inquiry has revealed that there are many "who cannot rest until they purchase the composition heard that appealed to them," using the words of an informant.

Leviathan Boasts Finest Radio Equipment Afloat

New York, April 19.—Aboard the steamship Leviathan, flagship of the United States lines, and largest vessel afloat when she recently sailed from New York to European ports went the most modern and best equipped radio station in the world. New equipment installed aboard the great liner gives her a radio outfit that represents the last word in efficiency. A staff of eight operators headed by Chief Radio Officer E. N. Pickerill, none of whom have had less than ten years' experience, and two messengers are included in the personnel necessary for the handling of the radio equipment. It is the largest radio personnel on any ocean liner.

Date: Tuesday, April 22.
Time: 12:45 p. m., central standard.

New York, April 19.—[Special.]—President Coolidge's address at the annual luncheon of the Associated Press at the Waldorf-Astoria, beginning Tuesday at noon will be broadcast over all territory east of the Rocky mountains through ten broadcasting stations of the country. The attempt to reach 5,000,000 receiving sets and probably 20,000,000 listeners will represent one of the most pretentious radio experiments ever undertaken in this country.

The address of President Coolidge will be picked up locally by Radio WEAF, American Telephone and Telegraph company. It will broadcast the speech in its own territory. From WEAF the President's message will be relayed by land wires to other broadcasting stations in different sections of the United States.

William Edward Harkness, in charge of radio activities of the A. T. & T. Co., explained that the ten broadcasting stations to be linked in the experiment with the President's speech on Tuesday represents the largest chain ever so formed. He further disclosed that the circuits to be formed on that occasion would be of a somewhat permanent nature, so that on important occasions in future the same circuits might become available.

Connecting those circuits on a semipermanent plan, he added, will not only make it possible to establish actual radio circuits in a very short time, "but will cut down the great expense now involved in establishing them."

WHN Pays $2,000 for License; Suit Is Dropped

New York, April 19.—[Special.]—Suit for infringement of patent brought by the American Telephone and Telegraph company against station WHN, atop Loew State theater, has been dropped as a result of an agreement whereby WHN takes out a license from the telephone company covering the use of the radio parts which were declared to be infringements. The fee was $2,000.

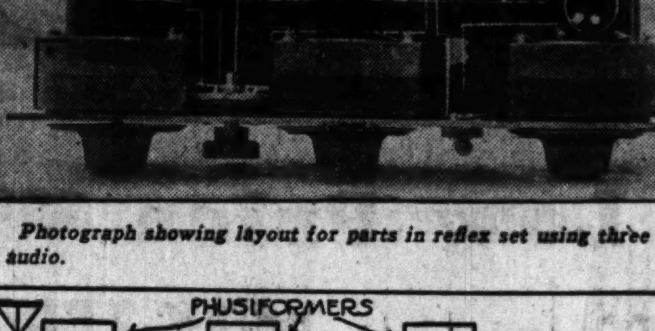
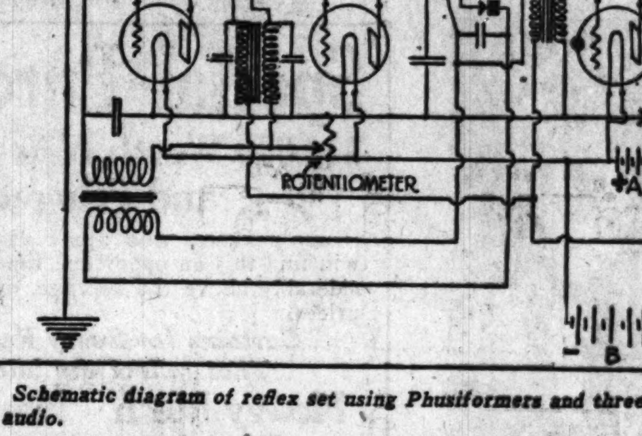
THIRD AUDIO STAGE EASY AS WIRING PROPOSITION



Photograph showing layout for parts in reflex set using three stages of audio.



Schematic diagram of reflex set using Phusiformers and three stages of audio.

VI. PHUSIFORMER REFLEX WITH THREE STAGES OF AUDIO.

For those who prefer volume and regard it as one of the keys to distance the photograph and diagram this week should make sailing easy and clear. Whether this method is advisable or not in construction of reflex is a matter for the builder, who theoretically is supposed already to have been able to judge what two stages will do. Unless he wishes to stop there it would be better to forget a third stage, for it will have little place in the five-tube set, which he should now be prepared to construct.

Diagrams and photographs published cover the field from crystal set to five-tuber, with success depending upon the care that is given to construction.

HERE AND THERE

Every year the Y. M. C. A. makes an effort to promote the idea of learning to swim, so that all may protect themselves during the summer months if need arises. These exercises will be given in conjunction with the regular morning exercises broadcast from KYW, and will be continued for thirty days, starting tomorrow..

George Scheuchenpflug, director of aquatics, will have charge of the instruction, assisted by the entire physical department staff.

The feminine influence is commencing to make itself felt in radio. One large manufacturer of loud speaker horns has received orders for thorite horns, to be made in nine different pastel shades to harmonize with the color schemes of boudoirs and the complexions of their owners. Dealers report that where a man will insist only on purity of tone and volume from a lour speaker, the women buyers will devote just as much attention to coloring and design. Incidentally, the loud speaker industry is assuming tremendous proportions, 600,000 horns and 90,000 complete Thorophone loud speakers being fixed as the 1924 production from this Chicago factory alone.

Radio time signals are of great value to the jeweler, Frank D. Urie, astronomer at Elgin observatory, told the Horological Institute of America during its sessions here last week, in explaining how a new science, wireless communication, has become the handmaid of an ancient craft, the making of timepieces.

Milwaukee Wis., April 19.—A course in radio construction and operation will be included on the curriculum of the 1924 summer session of Marquette university here, according to officials.

This course will be directed by the Rev. John B. Kremer, S. J., operator of the Marquette station, WHAD, and will be doubly interesting because of the fact that Marquette is to construct a new 500 watt station in the Administration building now under construction.

David Sarnoff, vice president and general manager of the Radio Corporation of America, will be the speaker Wednesday at a luncheon of the Association of Commerce, beginning at 12:15 p. m. Mr. Sarnoff, who, born in Russia thirty-three years ago, has risen from messenger boy to a leader in the world of electrical engineering, will have as his subject "Radio—the Voice of the World."

RELAY LEAGUE TO KEEP TAB ON BALLOON RACE

Amateurs to Report on Flight Positions.

San Antonio, Tex., April 19.—Eight free balloons, which will take off from Kelly field in this city Wednesday for the national balloon elimination race, will be followed closely by radio amateurs and the movements reported by radio to the balloon race executive. Coöperation of amateur radio operators will provide not only a means of keeping tab on the contestants, but may supply valuable information on air currents.

Start Expected at 5 p. m.

Inflating of the balloons will start about 8 a. m. and it is expected they will take off about 5 p. m.

Listeners in on WTAM, Cleveland, will be kept in close touch with the race. WTAM will stay on the air all that night in an effort to keep the balloonists informed of weather conditions and to warn them of storms.

This broadcasting will be at the request of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company, Akron O., whose entrant, the Goodyear III., is equipped with a high power receiving set.

Radioans Asked to Aid.

Radioans are requested to keep a lookout for these balloons, and when one is sighted note the color and markings, if possible, and let radio station WTAM know at once the name of the city and state from which it was seen. This information will be broadcast to the balloonists so they can check their own position with that of other contestants.

Crosley Again Astounds Radio World with TRIRDYN
Three Tube Receiver
This Set Will Do Anything That a Five Tube Set Can Do
Porto Rico to Canada and Coast to Coast on Loud Speaker
This new receiver has the following attractive features: Tuned Radio Frequency Amplification, Regenerative Detector Reflexed back on the first tube, and an additional stage of Audio Frequency Amplification. The combination of these things gives it the effect of at least five tubes, although there are but three. The selectivity of the TRIRDYN is almost uncanny. A tester located across the street from the Crosley Factory and practically under the W L W antenna, is able to tune in Fort Worth, Texas; Omaha, Neb., and other longer wave broadcasting stations THROUGH W L W. This receiving set is non-radiating (or non-reradiating), so that it causes no interference in a neighborhood in which it may be used. It is controlled by two dials, which can be perfectly and accurately calibrated, and being only two such dials, enables ease in picking up new stations without calibration. It can be used satisfactorily with a very small indoor antenna which provides loud speaker volume even on long distance stations. Excellent results have been obtained WITHOUT AN ANTENNA, using only a ground wire connected to the antenna binding post. Price of set in beautiful cabinet $65.00
Price of this set with all necessary equipment $102.50

Vernier Condensers versus Micro-Selective Tuning
1. Interrupted Control vs Continuous Control
Vernier condensers have the inconvenience of two knobs. The Vernier adjustment is mechanically inefficient. Its range is so small it is practically useless. You are compelled, therefore, to search for stations with the coarse adjustment and as a result miss many of them.
The UNIVERNIER employs one knob only which gives continuous 12-to-1 [micro-selective] control throughout the entire range of the condenser. The same knob gives rapid control when wanted. No chance to miss a DX station! More convenient, too!
2. Small Knob Control vs Large Knob Control
Vernier plates [as well as other vernier attachments] are controlled by very small knobs. This almost totally counteracts the ratio intended by the vernier.
To maintain full vernier efficiency the UNIVERNIER employs a 3¼ inch knob. Ample size and proper shape make accurate-tuning easy. [Diameter dial 3¼ in.]
Decide this case for Yourself!
WHICH shall it be? Vernier condensers or plain condensers made micro-selective with UNIVERNIER Dials?
Verdict of Most Fans
Buy good plain condensers. Equip them in a few minutes with UNIVERNIER Dials. Save money and get stations you'd never hear otherwise
UNIVERNIER with mahogany knob and gold-plated dial........ $1.50

MEMORIES

Easter and all it means is almost too sacred and important to be interpreted in a few words. It should always bring pleasant remembrances and give rise to the best—even the highest sentiments. And these began with the first development of childhood thought.

How fortunate we are to have our Easter, Christmas and other holy days. For those who think correctly, each day in the year should be a holy day—opportunity for some religious devotion, for kindliness and genuine helpfulness toward others, especially in the home—even to a stranger in the pathway of life.

Wasn't Delilah a sort of politically or patriotically minded spinster? Joan of Arc was among the most famous of spinsters. Scarcely less noted were Queen Elizabeth and St. Cecilia, and Mlle. l'Espinasse, and that member of the family and the court of Louis XV. who was known as "la Grand Mademoiselle" (if I weren't on board ship I'd look up her relationship to the Bourbons). In modern times there have been so many whose names have been writ high that it is a work of supererogation to enumerate them, but a few clamor on my conscience for recognition and must be included in this imperfect chronicle There are Miss Florence Nightingale, Miss Frances Willard, Miss Susan B. Anthony, Miss Clara Barton, and in our own immediate day and locality there is Miss Jane Addams.

In New York there is one striking example of the distinguished, brilliant, conspicuous single woman who has achieved renown which has spread her name far beyond that of most of her peers—Miss Anne Morgan, daughter of the late famous financier, J. P. Morgan. But it is not her father's light which makes her shine out to the rest of her contemporaries; it is her own high aims in various directions and especially her determined espousal of the cause of the sufferers in the devastated regions in France which have placed her in the prominent place she occupies today not only in this country but likewise in France and other continental countries. The mere mention of her name causes many a face to light up and many a cheerful smile to come.

"Mees Anne Morgan? Yes, we know her," is the universal response, when her name is spoken in certain parts of France.

Presence That's Felt.

However, it is not as a philanthropist that she will be remembered by those who know her today, but as an individual, a real and dominating personality, one whose presence is felt whenever she enters a room, one who, whenever she undertakes to put through anything, immediately finds many to help her, followers who believe that her leadership and coöperation spell success to any enterprise. She is noticeable in appearance. Her brilliant dark eyes and black hair frosted with a rather dazzling silver, her rich and warm coloring, and her fine carriage, and the fact that she dresses extremely well and is animated in her manner all combine to make a personality that attracts the attention of every one in her vicinity when she is in any gathering.

She has that same magnetism and vitality which were felt by every one in the presence of her father. He had extraordinarily brilliant and piercing eyes, though as a rule he did not permit himself so much animation in general company as is Miss Morgan's custom. She radiates life and vitality, not of the kind which takes from the vitality of those around, as do some vivacious people, but of the kind which seems to infuse itself among others and to provide a source of strength and vigor to the rest of the persons in her near neighborhood, which is an unusual quality, one rarely met.

She lives, not in the fine old Morgan home on Madison avenue and 36th street, but in a house of her own in that recently rediscovered district at the foot of East 46th street and the East river which is known as Sutton place, so named from the original owner of the land in the eighteenth century who had a farm on that spot. It became the fashion a few years ago in New York to take blocks of old houses and remodel them to fit today's ideas of comfort and luxury, while keeping as far as possible the ancient air of distinction and charm which none of the architects of the present time seem able to create in or impart to the houses they build for the sophisticated folk of today.

Old Time Residences.

Among the first to discover and make use of this venerable and shabby block of old time residences were the Rosecrans Baldwins of Chicago, who on account of business went to New York some five years or so ago to live. They selected a house, one of this little coterie, backing up on what once had been a charming garden. They remodeled the interior and made of it an enchanting dwelling looking out on one side to the lofty Queensboro bridge soaring overhead and on the other on the river with its barges and other sedate traffic, with Blackwell's island, looking more like a mediaeval castle than a prison, in the middle distance.

This house they sold to a member of the well known Havemeyer family, when business brought Mr. Baldwin back again to Chicago two years ago. To the same block shortly afterwards came Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, which arrival immediately raised the price of real estate in that neighborhood to an intoxicating height. She took the old house at the southwest corner of the same three sided block of antique residences, and without destroying its character and air of quaint picturesqueness made it into the luxurious mansion which the modern American of means thinks is his or her due and not to be dispensed with. But its outward effect is still simple and both it and the terrace overlooking the garden at the rear are in the best of taste.

Next to her two years ago Miss Anne Morgan bought two narrow old, 20 foot wide houses, prim little old maids of dwellings they were until she and her architect took them and tore down the partition, making of them one spacious and utterly sophisticated abode, with an interior to suit the requirements of its mistress. The entrance is delightful in its rendering of the London house of the time of the Georges, with marble floor, little and chic dressing rooms on either hand, a smart electric lift at one side, and a delicious circular stairway running up through the middle of the house as a hole threads a jewel, as if it were something on which to string the house, as indeed it might be, so perfect it is.

Except for two or three bedrooms where the decoration and furnishings are decidedly French, the main part of the house is English of the best periods. With all its correctness and elegance, it has great individuality, an effect of personality which gives it life and charm, qualities not always to be found in some of the most architecturally correct period houses of today.

It is not difficult to get a period house, given plenty of money and a clever and well instructed architect and interior decorator, but it is hard to get a house which greets the visitor with warmth and charm and at the same time gives that satisfaction which comes from contact with a work of art. Miss Morgan's is a gem of a house with just the right mixture of excellent taste and a certain sort of

St. Catherine's Club for Girls Plans New Home

By Kate Webber.

PARTICULARLY interesting at this time, when Chicago clubs are assisting in the first observance of Girls' week, is the history of the founding and maintenance of St. Catherine's club at 901 Addison street. Its directors claim as its most attractive feature that it is a real home, not an institution.

Because of the difficulty met by the child placing department of the Juvenile court in finding suitable homes in which girls coming under its jurisdiction might be placed with expedition and without having to wait for the usual lengthy processes in such cases, St. Catherine's club was founded in October, 1920, by a group of Catholic club women and social welfare workers.

The founders, through their active interest in the work of the courts, were thoroughly familiar with the needs of the girls who became its wards. They feel this club fills an imperative need by bridging the gap between the courtroom and the ultimate home.

Children who for various reasons are removed from environments of misfortune or neglect, and are in need of proper guardianship, find here a real home, where physical care, educational advantages, and spiritual guidance are theirs. In some instances the parents of these children have died; or have been found unfit to have the care of their own children. No delinquent girls are admitted to the home, however, the wards being dependent ones only. They are guilty of no offense against moral or civil law, but are victims of unfortunate surroundings from which the court removes them.

Through a court chairman, St. Catherine's club investigates the history of each case, and acts in coöperation with officers in placing her first in this home and giving her her fundamental right to normal childhood.

Through the club's efforts, more than 300 girls have been rehabilitated, made self-supporting, or placed in permanent homes, all in something over three years.

The directors believe that in saving these girls at a critical period, guarding and preparing them for normal young womanhood, fortifying them against dangers they may encounter, that they are making an excellent investment for the community as well as a humanitarian work.

The club operates on the cottage plan, which is advocated by most students of social problems. Each child receives individual attention, and there are several women's clubs and auxiliaries which supply seasonable entertainment and diversion for the girls. Among other annual plans is a summer outing for each girl at Michillinda, Mich.

Because of lack of room and facilities, the club has not been able to care for all the children who need its protection. Plans are under way at the present time for an improved home, which will have all those new and pleasant conveniences which make for contentment and the utmost in making the lives of the wards happy. Included in the plans is an oratory to be dedicated to the memory of two of the founders, Mrs. Albert Flanagan and Mrs. Francis J. Lewis.

The club is operated under the direction of a board, which is headed by the president and founder, Mrs. James R. Bremner. The other officers are Mrs. E. J. O'Connell and Mrs. William J. Corbett, vice presidents; Mrs. Joseph G. Murphy, treasurer; Mrs. George E. Brannan, recording secretary; Mrs. John A. Lapp, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Charles W. Flanagan, financial secretary.

In order to increase the building fund for the new home, the directors are giving a post-Easter card party on Saturday at 2 o'clock at Loyola university gymnasium. Mrs. James McAlear is general chairman of arrangements for the party.

Mrs. Edward S. Bailey is the new president of the Chicago Federation of Women's Organizations, which held its annual election last week. As past president of the I. F. W. C. and always to the fore in movements for civic betterment, Mrs. Bailey's election undoubtedly will mean an active year ahead for this organization.

The opening and dedication of the Oakhaven Old People's home will be held today at 3 o'clock at the new building, 113th street and Western avenue. The Rev. R. A. White, president of the board of trustees, will give the address, and there will be music. Mrs. Charles M. Woodman, who started the movement for erecting the home, will be hostess, with the presidents of five auxiliaries assisting. A public opening will be held on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Mrs. Charles S. Clark will be chairman.

Mrs. James R. Bremner is founder and president of St. Catherine's club, a home for dependent girls at 901 Addison street. To increase the facilities of the club, for which present quarters are inadequate, the directors will give a card party next Saturday at 2 o'clock at the Loyola university gymnasium.

The seventy delegates allotted Illinois at the fifth annual convention of the National League of Women Voters, to be held this week and next at Buffalo, N. Y., will make the journey under the guidance of Mrs. Clair E. More, transportation chairman. With Mrs. More at the helm, delegates to the several conventions of the league always have had the minimum of inconvenience usually in evidence on such occasions.

Women Voters to Meet in Buffalo

A SPECIAL train will leave Chicago on Wednesday, taking delegates to the fifth annual convention of the National League of Women Voters at Buffalo, N. Y., April 24-29. Delegates from surrounding states will meet here and go east with the Illinois delegation.

Illinois is entitled to approximately seventy delegates, and the league members hope they will take advantage of this and make a splendid showing at the convention sessions.

There will be several representative speakers from the state, including Mrs. Katherine Hancock Goode, member of Illinois' next legislature; Mrs. James W. Morrisson, Mrs. Kenneth F. Rich, Mrs. Alfred D. Kohn, Mrs. May Wood-Simons, Mrs. B. Frank Brown, Miss Edith Rockwood, Miss Elizabeth Christman, and others.

Among the delegates will be Mrs. Henry W. Cheney, past president of the Illinois league; Mrs. John A. Lapp, Mrs. Latimer Goodrich, and Mrs. G. L. Thompson of Rock Island, board members; Mrs. Walter L. Benson, Miss Mary E. McDowell, Mrs. Edward McCready of Oak Park, Dr. Rachelle S. Yarros, Mrs. Robert Schott of Quincy, Mrs. Kenneth McKenzie of Urbana, Mrs. Irene Goins, Mrs. S. C. Hurley of Downers Grove, Mrs. Belle Jamieson of Hollywood, Mrs. Edward T. Lee, Mrs. A. L. Adams of Jacksonville, Dr. Mabel Otis of Moline, Miss Mabel Linn, Miss Maud Freeman, Mrs. W. D. Shenefield of Mattoon, Mrs. Frank Mellish of Berwyn, Mrs. Charles Anderson, and Miss Eleanor Perkins.

Club Ethics

Maude Swalm Evans.

THE frequenters of the lunch table forum were diligently interspersing chicken salad and opinions on just what constituted loyalty in a club member.

"The woman who believes in her club and defends it, and is willing to fight for it if necessary, is the loyal one," voiced the militant member.

"I should say that the woman who tries to understand every side of a situation before she judges it, and who gives her club officers and fellow members credit for worthy motives whenever possible, is showing an important phase of club loyalty," claimed the ex-president.

"According to my way of thinking, a loyal club member is one who comes to committee meetings—on time—and takes a working interest in them after she gets there," spoke up the committee chairman.

"I've comes to believe that the loyal member is the one who eats her luncheon at the club whenever she's down town at noon," hinted the luncheon chairman. "I had a deficit of $14 last month."

"The member who acquaints herself with parliamentary law and studies her club's bylaws thoroughly is showing considerable loyalty," contributed the parliamentarian.

"I'm strong for the one who keeps within her club circle any disagreements that may arise, or anything that may not reflect credit on her organization," stated the idealist.

"To sum up," finished the legal minded one, "a loyal club member is one who supports the activities of her club by work, or money, or conversation; who guards its good name as she would that of her own family; who upholds its officers, its bylaws, and its ideals, and who has its best interest at heart in thought and deed."

DOWNTOWN CLUBS

The Chicago League of Women Voters will make four valuable contributions to the success of the city's first observance of Girls' week. There will be programs at the Scanlan school tomorrow afternoon, at the Farragut school on Thursday afternoon, and at the Home for Delinquent Girls on Friday evening. On Saturday evening a program arranged especially for business girls will be given in the assembly room of the Chicago Historical society, Dearborn and Ontario streets. At this meeting the records of the famous suffrage struggle in Illinois conducted by the Chicago Political Equality league through twenty-seven years will pass into the keeping of the Historical society.

Girls' week will be observed at the Y. W. C. A. with special features that include a health pagent tomorrow evening, an open meeting of the central branch charm school on the subject of "My Job and I" on Thursday evening, and an international tea party at the foreign student foyer on Friday afternoon, at which girls from many nations who are now studying in Chicago will be hostesses.

Women who have made good in unusual professions will tell the younger girls some of their recipes for business success on Thursday evening at central branch in a vocational evening. Mrs. George W. Plummer, president of the alliance of business and professional women, will speak on "My Job—What I Put into It and What I Get Out of It." Miss Jessamine Hoagland will talk on "Women in Banking"; Miss Neva O. Lesley, secretary of the school of commerce at Northwestern university will discuss "The Private Secretary," and Miss Bernice Theodore will tell about opportunities for women in the real estate business. At the same time the girls of the Y. W. C. A. industrial service center will be putting on an industrial evening when groups of factory girls, by exhibits and stunts, will illustrate the sort of work they do. All Y. W. C. A. centers will hold open house and welcome visitors each day of Girls' week. Tea will be served daily at central branch.

In recognition of proposed plans for Girls' week, the Wildflower Preservation society will be at home to a group of 250 girls on Saturday at 2 o'clock in Fullerton hall, the Art institute. A moving picture program will be given and tea will be served.

The annual business meeting of the Chicago Woman's club will be held in Recital hall on Wednesday, the first session convening at 10 o'clock. At this meeting the following reports will be given: Hospitality, Mrs. Horace C. Gardner; house, Mrs. Robert F. Palmer; press, Mrs. Alfred C. Tyler; calendar, Mrs. Robert F. Palmer; club program, Mrs. George Bass; business program, Mrs. Arthur I. Stephens; club bulletin, Miss Florence Beckett, editor, and Miss Josephine Merrill, business manager; legislation, Mrs. John T. Mason; art and literature department, Miss Alice E. Tomorrow, Easter Monday, the annual Shakespeare day celebration of the art and literature department will be held at 10:15 o'clock at the Playhouse. At 1 o'clock a luncheon will be given in the clubrooms for members of the art and literature department.

The annual meeting and election of officers of the League of Cook County Women's clubs will be held on Saturday at 10:30 o'clock at room 200, Fine Arts building. Candidates for president are Mrs. Harry J. Ilett and Mrs. Charles S. Cornelius.

Tomorrow at 2 o'clock the Big Sisters will give the annual card party at the Belden hotel, 2300 Lincoln Park west. The proceeds will go toward the organization's work of aiding all girls and women in need of spiritual and material assistance.

The annual spring luncheon of the Southern Woman's club will be held on Thursday at 1 o'clock at the Edgewater Beach hotel. A program will be given and the guests will be Mrs. Edward S. Bailey and past presidents.

joyous luxury which expresses its owner to a T.

Fashionable and Quiet.

She, like Mrs. Vanderbilt and the others who abut on the garden shared by them all, has a small plot of ground reserved to her with a terrace and little iron fence dividing it from the rest, but in such a way as to seem not a division but a part of the ornamentation of the garden as a whole.

Her next door neighbors on the other side from that occupied by Mrs. Vanderbilt are two other famous Gotham spinsters, Miss Marbury, the well known impresario and authority on matters artistic and dramatic, and Miss Elsie De Wolf, the equally famous authority on interior furnishings. Various other lesser notabilities live in the rest of the made over old houses, and enjoy the quiet retirement which still hangs around that part of town in spite of the fact that it has been discovered by such fashionable and widely renowned people.

The view across the Hudson river is charming but, between you and me, it isn't a patch on the view enjoyed by those who live within sight of good old Lake Michigan in smoky Chicago. We might, however, well take lessons of these canny New Yorkers who so adroitly transform these squares of old houses to modern demands and to such comfortable and delightful conclusions. They turn the interiors around, you know, putting the kitchens, where necessary, in what used to be considered the front of the house, thus leaving the rear free to be made into charming companionship with the garden, a space thrown open to all and used as a little park by the residents living around it. It has been tried in various parts of New York

For instance, there is that part which is quaintly called "Turtle bay," where the Ernest Pooles, formerly of Chicago, live. There are still many delicious old streets left in New York, principally in lower New York, where the ancient houses adorned with wonderful iron grill work abound and which could be made into dwellings that would be far more attractive than any of the marble palaces on upper East Fifth avenue.

New Yorkers are not so keen on living in one locality and close together as we are in Chicago. We shall wake up some day and discover here many quaint, out of the way corners with sedate, old houses waiting the hand of the architect to come to life again. A few weeks ago, on my way to the steamer at its Christopher street docks, I saw such an alluring block of red brick New York houses with richly wrought iron balconies on both the first and second floors waiting to be discovered. They stood in the midst of today's clamorous traffic with an air as startled and surprised and out of place as would a woman in hoop skirts and poke bonnet in the same crowd.

It was my last impression of New York and it stayed with me after the S. S. Orca had borne me far out across the rather restless and peevish ocean. There are inevitable moments in any voyage when the traveler wonders why under the shining sun he or she ever left a nice, cozy, steam heated flat, one well anchored to its place in a cheerful city full of good friends, one equipped with a cook who makes coffee just the way the wanderer likes it. Why leave all these comforting elements to cross a mean tempered, nervous ocean in a cold, damp ship filled with a motley crowd of doubtless excellent people, but not your own, and with that gift of God, good coffee, receding ever farther and farther to the west?

[Koehne Photo.]

The marriage of Miss Dorothy Tegtmeyer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Tegtmeyer of 5700 Washington boulevard, to George Richard Stege, son of Mr. and Mrs. George R. Stege of Oak Park, took place on April 5.

No ship that sails the sea ever has good coffee. There is something in sea air which makes it an impossibility to evolve this exquisite beverage from even the best coffee bean grown on Jamaica's Blue mountain, where the best coffee bean on this round earth of ours is cultivated, not excepting even Java or Mocha.

"Man Overboard."

How rapidly one's boundaries contract! Ours are but the size of this ship, with an outlying sash of ocean reaching to the horizon. So, when a third class passenger, who had been visiting on the upper deck but a half hour before, threw himself into the sea from the lower stretches of the after deck and, after a few struggles, disappeared below the leaden waves, and the cry of "Man overboard!" resounded from bow to stern, every one was shocked and startled. Those napping in their cabins downstairs started up, they knew not why, and came hurrying on deck. Others in the smoking room left their cards and pipes to rush out and join the crowds hanging over the railings scanning the tossing waters to see if they could get a glimpse of their sadly unfortunate, rashly importunate fellow being. A life preserver, which had been promptly thrown out after him, bobbing up and down in futile fashion, was the only sign that anything had happened.

It was exciting to watch the lifeboat on the port side being slung out and manned by half a dozen sailors and the second officer. They all wore life preservers slung about their necks like queer, awkward collars. The boat hung suspended for two hours while the ship circled slowly round, covering a wide radius, waiting for a cry from the lookouts posted high up in the rigging at both ends of the ship, but none came, and at the end of the time we steamed slowly eastward again in the gray, windy afternoon.

MISS HELEN JANET ERICKSEN.
[Lewis-Smith Photo.]

The announcement is made by Mrs. Hilda J. Ericksen of 3146 Sheridan road of the engagement of her daughter, Helen Janet, to Arthur W. Ohlrogge, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Ohlrogge of 3835 North Central Park avenue.

The poor man who thus had his little hour of supreme importance before fading into the everlasting shadows was said to be a German who had spent the last penny of his poor mother's savings to come to our country to make his everlasting fortune. Failing to do so, in the year he had allowed for the purpose, he spent his—and her final bit of money on a ticket back to his native land, and, unable to face the disappointment such a return would be to her, he sought a solution in this final manner.

For the rest of the day a hush hung over the ship's ordinarily cheerful company, and when the younger element on board asked the captain if they could have the usual dance after dinner, he said, "Not tonight just after that poor fellow killed himself. Still," he added, "if any one turns on the phonograph in the after smoking room without my knowledge—well, that's your own lookout."

From the many stories that followed this incident it would seem that such suicides are the commonplaces of sea travel. In fact, it seems quite a miracle to have any one land. But stories accumulate and multiply at such times As I said above, the narrow bounds of a ship increase the importance of such occurrences, for death in many forms is the common accompaniment to life. Imaginative passengers of the female persuasion reported having seen the suicide's face looking in at their ports during the rather tossing and tumultuous night that followed his death. So much for nice, healthy imagination on board ship!

Tragic, Daily Picture.

Another dramatic element is added to the somewhat tedious monotony of ship's life by the fact that the U. S. A. is deporting by this craft three other undesirables, said to be Russians who are insane, either having arrived so or having become so after reaching Ellis island. One of these, a woman, daily walks the third class deck, a striking and rather terrible figure. Her thick bobbed black hair, about five or six inches long and wonderfully curly, is blown by the wind either over her remarkably fine and regular features, quite concealing them, or straight back from them, revealing a high, well shaped forehead, delicate, aquiline nose, well shaped mouth, oval face, and unusually white skin. She has a well set up body, and walks with a firm, free tread up and down the lower desk, her rather short skirts flapping about her shapely legs, her quite small and well shod feet taking swift steps, sometimes even dancing a measure or two, and all the time, up and down, with her eyes fixed on the staring passengers of the upper decks, she talks, talks, talks, with an occasional bursting into a queer, quavering song in what I suppose is her own tongue. She smiles much and seems happy in a strange, elfish way.

It is a tragic, daily picture and haunts at least one of her fellow passengers. A ship is a small and confined world and the apparitions of death and madness come close to those confined to its bounds.

Sad State of Maidens.

As always when voyaging on the high seas, the scribe is struck with the formidable number of elderly, unattached American females wandering companionless or in couples up and down the world. No others of their kind from other nations are so well equipped financially to take to the great road. Formerly Englishwomen in the same plight used to be found singly or in groups roving on the high seas and scaling steep mountains, but the war ended all that, as it ended many other pleasant thing for Europeans and inhabitants of the British isles.

An Englishman on this ship gave utterance to the lament as to the sad situation of the maidens of his country, thousands of whom are born to wither on the parent stem unwooed, unwed. Over 100,000 of the youths of the English upper class who would now be of marriageable age perished in the war. It will take another generation to replace them; meanwhile, for those withering maidens life looms bleak and stark.

When I asked why they did not go out to the colonies, where a plurality of men still obtains, he said simply, "O, well, they can't marry out of their class, you know." His remedy was the

KERMANS

These "Smart" Coats and Frocks are typical of the unusual values prevailing here

The price one pays for a Frock or Coat is not nearly as important as the assurance of quality and authentic styling which is always so evident in KERMANS Modes.

Frocks of Chiffon and Lace
$45, $55 and up

Fashion favors Chiffon and Lace. In the skillful hands of KERMANS designers these "fairy-like" materials have been fashioned into frocks of exquisite beauty. Note those pictured, suitable for dinner or formal afternoon wear.

Fur Trimmed Coats of "Character"
$65 to $110 and up

The newest and smartest fabrics—Juina, Charmeen, Twill Cord, Loerchene, Silhouette Cloth and Faille Crepe beautifully trimmed with Beige or White Ermine, Summer, Mink dyed or Cocoa Squirrel, Baby Fox or Leopard—make these interesting groups the season's outstanding values.

These are typical of KERMANS unusual values. And they are only a few of hundreds equally as interesting from the standpoint of style and price.

Our North and South Side Stores are open Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings.

This charmingly girlish frock is fashioned of Powder Blue Crepe Elizabeth, with wide inserts and cascade of Lace in the same attractive color. A rosette and streamers of darker blue adds to its charm. $45.

Extremely "chic" is this unusual Coat, fashioned of Twill Cord, in that so-popular Spring shade—Artichoke Green—and trimmed, full length, with cocoa squirrel. $65.

Chiffon and Lace—these enticing conceits of Fashion were never more artfully employed than in this frock of black chiffon and lace, over flesh colored chiffon. The girdle of midnight blue and rose velvet ribbon completes its charm. $55.

A strikingly unusual coat is developed in brickdust Charmeen, gathered on a choker collar of cloth and Mink-Dyed Squirrel. Bands of duvetyne and braid, in contrasting hues, form effective borders. $75.

introduction of polygamy. "When I get into parliament, I'll go for that," he added with a broad grin.

Shade of Queen Victoria, that polygamy should be talked of even in jest as a remedy for present conditions in the marital market! A cure worse than the disease, some would say but the thought of all those hopeless, hapless young things makes some radical treatment seem necessary.

Curiously enough, and the same Britisher is my informant, the Englishwoman of education and position of today is not nearly so much interested in politics as are her American sisters of the same outlook on life. There are no Mrs. Medill McCormicks, no Mrs. Kellogg Fairbanks, no Mrs. Arthur Meekers, no Mrs. Fletcher Dobynses among the socially prominent women in London of the present time. There are lots of brilliant talkers on politics among the smart leaders of society, women whose influence means a great deal, but of real hard workers women who are willing to do the drudgery required in running a campaign, there are few among the s. p.'s, while, as every one knows, the most brilliant example of a woman in English politics is by birth a countrywoman of ours, Lady Astor. If we sum it up, the Englishwoman of the great world is perhaps a more dazzling figure, a better talker, more informed on many topics of interest today, than her American cousin, but not so good a worker or so influential in the politics which really count, those that concern the local situations, in towns, counties, states, as well as the national field of the great game.

Chicagoans on Board.

Besides the X. family on the good ship Orca, there are two other Chicago women, Mrs. Hamilton McCormick-Goodhart and Mrs. Alexander F. Stevenson Jr. Mrs. McCormick-Goodhart is planning to spend the summer with her family in England, while Mrs. Stevenson is going to visit her relatives in Denmark after a short tour of France, Germany, and Austria. The X. family, after studying dispassionately and exhaustively the politics, manners, and customs of England today, plans to return to the U. S. A. by June 1, to become again a part of that cheerful, bridge playing, mah jongg pursuing, golf loving, tennis-ing, hard riding, and hospitable community known far and wide as Lake Forest.

Health Restored by Radium

The wonderful curative power of Radium has been known for years. However, the benefits of this precious healthgiving substance have in the past been only within the means of persons of wealth.

Since the invention of Degnen's Radio-Active Solar Pad, any man or woman, poor or rich, can afford this treatment which offers so much relief from suffering and disease.

Degnen's Radio-Active Solar Pad is worn next to the body day and night. It pours a constant stream of radio-active energy into the system while you work, play or sleep, helping to build up weakened nerves and tissues to a strong, healthy condition. It creates a vigorous circulation of blood, thus removing congestion, which is the real cause of most diseases.

To prove just what this remarkable treatment can do for you, we will send our appliance on trial with the understanding that we will not charge you a cent if it fails to give satisfactory results. This offer is open to any person who has pain of any kind, nerve weakness, high blood pressure, stomach, kidney or liver complaint, bladder trouble, or disease of the lungs or heart.

No matter what your ailment or how long you have had it, we will gladly let you try the appliance at our risk. Write today for free literature giving complete information. Radium Appliance Co., 1407 Bradbury Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

They Relieve the Foot
Yet Deceive the Eye

The Muriel—portraying one of the smartest strap and cut-out effects of spring... light and dainty, yet giving you that marvelous comfort that only the Feeture-Arch can give.

$9.50

RIGID
Foot-pains, leg-pains, discomfort in walking, excessive foot moisture warn you that your arch needs support. Feeture-Arch shoes support your arch firmly, yet they are completely flexible.

Some women can wear any shoe comfortably ... most women can't. Some women will wear any bulky shoe just for comfort ..., most women won't. But who will not welcome footwear in the newest Parisian vogue with a lithe and healthful comfort hidden into them that relieves the foot, yet deceives the eye? Johansen, creator of smart footwear for 50 years, has added a comfort that no other shoes can have!

Johansen's Feeture Arch

For Tailleur Wear. You will be amazed first that such style could be combined with comfort, then, when you wear them, that such comfort could be combined with style.

$8.50

so your foot never feels "boundup"—so you have full freedom for every bone and muscle with every step. You need both rigidity and flexibility—and Feeture-Arch shoes give both!

Separates Wild and Water Waves

The maiden who treasures her water wave, and yet who longs for the coolness of lake or ocean waves doesn't sound a plaintive note at all when she sings, "Nobody knows how dry I am." She only means that at last she has found something to keep her hair from getting sopping wet, for the modern maiden dives and stunts in the water as earnestly as her brother.

And this year there is a device that is said to be almost dampproof as concerns feminine locks. It is a rubber water guard made of the heavy rubber from which diving caps are fashioned. Only instead of being a cap it is just a wide band—perhaps four inches or even five at the widest—with a heavily reinforced rim fitting about the forehead and reinforced ear shaped pieces that fit over the ears. The forehead rim is narrow, but it is so thick and firm that it is said to keep all water out, and the ear pieces are hollow, which abolishes the old fashioned discomfort of too tightly pressing caps and yet prevents the trickling in of the wild, wild waves.

This guard is put on next to the hair and then one's more decorative bathing cap put on over it.

And speaking of bathing caps, there are some fascinating ones in the shops just now for wear in the warmer climates. One is made of rubber and then covered with narrow frilled bandings of rubber, attached in such a way that the cap looks as if it were made of gorgeous Roman striped ribbon.

Another is made of rubberized silk that wraps around into what is called a sheik cap, with a colored buckle up in front, and tie ends caught in behind the right ear. In place of a buckle a monogram might grace the front, especially if one has fallen so completely for the monogram craze as to have one for a bathing suit ornament. Suits and caps are often made to match and be livened by just such touches.

A few of the newest suits are made of gay chintzes, but black silks still hold sway, letting the colors find their places in bathing cape, trimming, or accompanying cap.

Seizing the Moment.

Perhaps the getting of a job will b harder than winning your family. Th first thing I advise is this: Rememb the time you are apt to make th grade is when the producer is reall ready to put on a production. I spea from experience. I have dressed an dolled up for hours, borrowed all th clothes, jewelry, and perfume I cou extract from my roommates at th
Hollywood Studio club, going to try t vamp a job out of a director, and have come home jobless. But on sev eral occasions I have landed the be parts I have ever played, on a rain day, when I had on an old badly fittin raincoat, and literally I resembl something the cat dragged in. Wh is the answer? Because I happened the day they were looking for types.
For example, one of the best parts have ever played, was Agnes in Wi ard Mack's latest play, "Red Bul dogs." I read this part to him at
a. m. in a crowded automobile, and h never even looked at me, as I was si ting back to him. Why did I get this Principally because he was ready t open his play in two weeks, and it wa difficult to find a girl who spoke Frenc fluently. Everything you have eve studied or known will help you o
the stage, for acting is just life. Th stage is well called "Life's Mirror."
When you first decide to go on th stage find out who is producing a ne play, and haunt his doorstep. Be wil ing to begin in the chorus, or eve walking on, or doing extra work in pi tures. I do not say this is the be

WANT TO BE AN ACTRESS? HERE'S HOW

By Aimee Torriani.

DO YOU want to be an actress? There is nothing in the world can stop you, if that desire is strong enough, and your love for the stage is deep and sincere.

It is truly the most fascinating and satisfying life one can lead, not because it is wild, free, and happy go lucky, but because it is fundamentally a life of service. Already many of you may disagree with me. Let us go back. Is the stage life really wild? Is it as free as the public thinks? Do you realize that there are few people in the world who have as little time to be wild?

When a play is preparing for production, rehearsals last from 10 a. m. until 6 p. m., and often on into the night. After it opens, we play every night, and always two or three matinees, and sometimes daily afternoon performances. There is nothing free about our lives. No convent or boarding school girl has more discipline regarding hours of work than the chorus girl. The stage is a life of service, for it is essentially to entertain others that our lives are led—not alone to amuse a few chosen, or our loved ones, but all who care to see or hear us. Remember this, girls, those of you who yearn for the footlights' glare; you will not be amused or entertained; it is for you to give.

If you feel you have talent for music, dancing, dramatic or screen acting, try it. Your families would not object if you decided to do social or settlement work, to try to make the world happier, for people to live in. The stage today is doing just that, so if you have only your family to convert, explain this to them.

Seizing the Moment.

Perhaps the getting of a job will be harder than winning your family. The first thing I advise is this: Remember the time you are apt to make the grade is when the producer is really ready to put on a production. I speak from experience. I have dressed and dolled up for hours, borrowed all the clothes, jewelry, and perfume I could extract from my roommates at the Hollywood Studio club, going to try to vamp a job out of a director, and I have come home jobless. But on several occasions I have landed the best parts I have ever played, on a rainy day, when I had on an old badly fitting raincoat, and literally I resembled something the cat dragged in. What is the answer? Because I happened in the day they were looking for types.

For example, one of the best parts I have ever played, was Agnes in Willard Mack's latest play, "Red Bulldogs." I read this part to him at 3 a. m. in a crowded automobile, and he never even looked at me, as I was sitting back to him. Why did I get this? Principally because he was ready to open his play in two weeks, and it was difficult to find a girl who spoke French fluently. Everything you have ever studied or known will help you on the stage, for acting is just life. The stage is well called "Life's Mirror."

When you first decide to go on the stage find out who is producing a new play, and haunt his doorstep. Be willing to begin in the chorus, or even walking on, or doing extra work in pictures. I do not say this is the best school but it is one of the many gateways to the land of dreams. Another, and possibly the finest at the present, is the Community Theater movement that is growing up about us. Get into a community or a little theater group, if there is one in your town, neighborhood, university, or school, and if there isn't, try to start one yourself.

Opportunity Everywhere.

Some of you pine because you are not in New York. You feel if only you lived there you could succeed. New York is a marvelous place, but Chicago runs it a close second in opportunities to get into the theatrical world. And many of our smaller cities have splendid Little theaters, like the Buffalo Players. They have one of the finest directors in the country.

And out on the Pacific shores, where California's sunshine is a great inducement to all that is beautiful, you will find many rare chances to get golden experience. Besides the film world in Hollywood, which is more difficult than the kingdom of heaven to enter, there is that wonderful annual production of the Pilgrimage Play. It runs nightly, for about twelve weeks, and takes place in a natural cañon theater with God's own moon, stars, and sky for its canopy, and the most beautiful hills, trees, flowers, and shrubs for its scenery. Henry Herbert, who plays The Christ, is so great an artist that, just listening to him nightly, you cannot help imbibing in your soul some of the rare gifts Mr. Herbert has and knows how to impart. It is not so dreadfully difficult to get into the Pilgrimage Play, though, like Shakespeare, the Bible affords little chance for women. Mary Magdalene and Mary Mother are the only real parts. I played Martha one season, and though in my own mind Martha was an important character, I found out soon that she only spoke four lines in the Bible and in the Pilgrimage Play.

But there are large numbers of women who go through the play following The Christ, and the field for study here is great. This is only one of the many lanes of love's labor to try to stroll into, if ever you reach the land of sunshine.

Believe in Yourself.

I meet many old people who say to me, "If I had been talented, I would have gone on the stage when I was young. It has been the sorrow of my life that I could not do something in an artistic line."

But I find more who have great talent and beauty and are still in the back ranks of the stage, and many and many a soul who, when he or she began, was not considered at all talented and is now a foremost actor or actress.

The woman who is considered our most versatile and one of our greatest actresses was at one time told, by no less a personage than David Belasco himself, "You are beautiful to look at, but you cannot speak a line."

That story has been told to me but I know this one to be a fact: When I was in the chorus of a George M. Cohan show in this city four years ago there was a girl in the chorus that Julian Mitchell, the great inimitable producer, used to say to, "Get behind that other girl, Dumb Dora. As a graceful chorus girl you'd make a good hash slinger." This girl went out the next season as prima donna in a second company of that same show, and today she is a successful star in a New York review. I attribute this to two things. She believed in herself, in spite of all insults, and she accepted and benefited by criticism, no matter how harsh.

Both the stage and screen are great schools of discipline, to make you see yourself as you really are, stripped of all life's vanities. You are deeply hurt, your tenderest spot is cut and left bleeding a hundred times a season when you first begin. But if you are sincere, if you love acting, and the stage for its own sake and for your public's sake, you will leave all these personalities as a burnt offering on the altar of art and go along unbittered and smiling as before. This is a difficult lesson. I really do believe it is because many have failed to learn it that we see numbers of talented, fine looking people doing three a day vaudeville when many a bad actor fills our Broadway casts.

Prepare for Poverty.

Another essential thing to learn, if you love the stage, is not to fear poverty. If you are worried about being poor or hungry, do not leave the shelter of your home. For I venture to say there is hardly an actress or actor living who has not known what it means to be broke and hungry. Not always because they did not earn money, but often because all they earned had to go to others less fortunate.

If you start out in the chorus or doing bits in a stock company or in pictures, there will be weeks and even months that you will have no work. And unless you have some other vocation, such as stenography, manicuring, nursing to fall back on, you will be in a bad way. I know a girl who is a chorus girl in winter and a licensed embalmer in the summer. This is a true story, cross my heart. I asked her once which profession she preferred; she answered, "The dead ones in the summertime can be depended on more than the live ones in the wintertime."

I have known other girls who had families or believing friends to help them, so when they were laying off between jobs they had money given them to study dancing or singing or they went to a dramatic school, of which there are several fine ones now. But by far the greatest schooling you can have is to work with a truly great artist or to be in a stock company that has a fine director. These are gifts of the gods to be prayed for.

Artists Hard Workers.

If you are fortunate enough to get with geniuses, watch them carefully, their every move; study their walk, their gestures, their voices, and, above all, their vision of the stage.

I find more and more that the mediocre actor says, "I work for Saturday nights, and the rest of the week I mind my own business," while the artist almost forgets Saturday night exists and looks for improvement in every performance, is willing to change or alter his conception of things if it will benefit the production as a whole.

There is no one who proves this to me more than those two scintillating stars the Duncan sisters. I have been with them since the first rehearsal of "Topsy and Eva." Every note of music in the show they have written, and several numbers that they had given their life to write have been taken out of the show for one reason or another—the act ran too long or it was not just the spot for such a song. Yet these geniuses accepted the suggestion, as they do all suggestions of directions that benefit their production. Rosetta and Vivian Duncan deserve all the success and more than the world can ever give them, not alone because they are hard workers and great artists, but because they are rare souls.

If you get the chance to play even a bit, put your best into it, live it. I do not mean by this to go out and live the life of the part you portray. Try to understand what the character's thoughts are.

Sir Herbert Tree once said to Elsie Mackay when she was rehearsing the part of Anne Boleyn in "Henry the Eighth" (the first company I was ever with): "Remember, Miss Mackay, Anne Boleyn was the sort of woman who flirted with God when she said her prayers."

Could anything describe a character better than this?

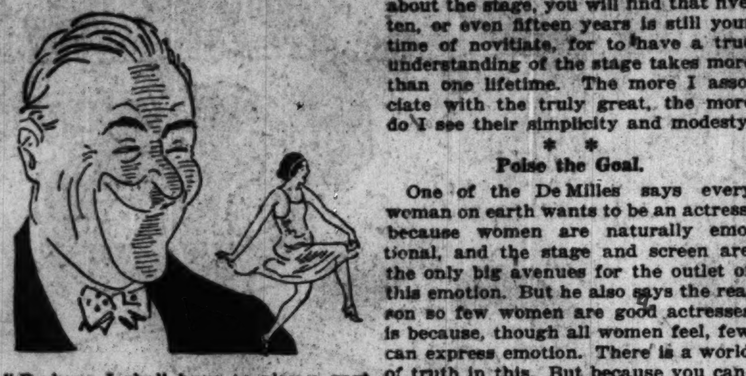
Learn from Life.

Learn not only from people on the stage, but learn also from life. If you have to sit next to the sort of person in a train you just can't stand, think "Perhaps I shall have to play a part like that some day," so watch her.



I remember as a child hating a janitress we once had. I was a rich little poor girl, and lived in a sort of New York tenement. This janitress made a lasting impression on me. I can close my eyes and see her now. A year or so ago I was in a stock company in California, playing small parts. One week they found the character woman had departed to a better job, so there was no one to play the She Bear in the next week's bill, "The Cinderella Man." I offered to play it. They literally laughed in my face. Being rather flapperish looking that season, I had started out playing a little French maid, and had lost all but my life, losing fifteen pounds in three weeks; hence no one pictured me as the old janitress with the awful voice. However, they let me rehearse the part, and as no character woman could be found, I had to play it. I stayed up all one night, trying to make myself look and feel like the much despised janitress of my childhood. I made such a hit I was allowed to remain as character woman in that company for the rest of the season. And possibly it is the effects of that season that have wished on me the blessed old part I am playing in "Topsy and Eva."

Even if you do go on the stage and find it is not the calling you want to give your life to, you have lost nothing; in fact, you probably have gained a store of great wealth, in poise, dignity, and understanding. I know a wise mother who has five daughters, and she says she feels every girl should teach school, and be on the stage for a year or more before she marries and attempts to bring up a family, in this advanced day and age. So, if it should happen that after a year or so of struggle or of success you leave the stage, you will have those days of vagabonding to look back upon, as one does on the book of adventure read in childhood. On the other hand, if you are in dead earnest about the stage, you will find that five, ten, or even fifteen years is still your time of novitiate, for to have a true understanding of the stage takes more than one lifetime. The more I associate with the truly great, the more do I see their simplicity and modesty.

Poise the Goal.

One of the De Milles says every woman on earth wants to be an actress, because women are naturally emotional, and the stage and screen are the only big avenues for the outlet of this emotion. But he also says the reason so few women are good actresses is because, though all women feel, few can express emotion. There is a world of truth in this. But because you cannot express it in the first part you play does not necessarily mean you never will. For, once you have a footing, improve all the time. If you are in the chorus, or doing one line, your great goal is what the French call "abandonment," to be released, free. I know this seems so easy, but wait until you try to do it. Even after you have attained much freedom, the day will come when suddenly you will feel so self-conscious and bound hand and foot you won't know how you can take the next step.

Miss Lenore Ulrich told me just a few weeks ago that one night, while playing "Kiki" in New York, she suddenly got such an attack of stage fright she had to say to her audience, "Please bear with me for a moment, and everything will come back to me."

But for a few moments she could not think of a line. This may seem almost impossible, but when you speak with violinists, pianists, singers, and other artists you will find that many of them have gone through this in the earlier years of their careers. There seems to be a release and freedom that comes to one when that unshakable poise is attained.

The greatest and perhaps the unattainable secret of stage success is summed up in that little word, give. The world consists of givers and getters, and if we belong to the givers, or school ourselves to dwell therein, we may become truly great artists; for the artist must give and give, as the well does. She cannot give a bit, and then wait to receive, or she will find that her public has forgotten her and is cheering the next star in the sky of fame. So, to become truly worth while in the life of the footlights, one must never tire of giving all and demanding nothing.

If your vision of the stage is truly unselfish, and if you are willing to work and wait, I say, "Good luck to you. You cannot help but win. All obstacles can be overcome, mental, moral, or spiritual. Success is yours; go forth and take it."

Guests of The Belmont find it easy to extend to their friends the hospitality proper for any occasion. Nothing is more important, to the kind of people who find The Belmont congenial to their standards of living; and nothing has been more carefully planned than the facilities of hospitality.

The main lounge is a delightful place to spend an hour or an evening with a guest; it has all the restful charm of informal elegance, an inviting richness peculiarly its own. Less formal but no less tasteful are the spacious apartment living rooms, used by guests of The Belmont for the more intimate occasions.

A dinner or luncheon in the main dining room may be given with quite the tone of formality or informality that you wish. Your waiter understands these matters, and the dining room service is there to interpret your wishes.

There are private rooms, beautifully appointed, for the more elaborate dinners or luncheons. On the other hand, the most informal of meals can be served in one's own kitchenette apartment.

The ball room, on the top floor, is a gem; done in the festive French manner, it sparkles with gaiety, the most gracious of settings for a debutante party or other formal occasion. It leads onto the roof garden, a particularly delightful spot on summer evenings.

NEWS OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD

Special Music Is Easter Message of Joy in Churches

By the Rev. W. B. Norton.

Music, flowers, baptisms, offerings for missionary and benevolent work, corner stone laying, parade of Knights Templar and services, jubilation that the days of Lent are over will mark the Easter services today in the churches. The passover will be recognized by the Jews and certain churches which do not accept as a fact the resurrection of Christ will sound a joyous note over the resurrection of nature as seen in the springtime. It is preeminently a day of joy and gladness.

Every church sending in its notices to THE TRIBUNE announces special Easter music. We cannot tabulate it but we note a few churches where special evening programs are given, or where the Easter program is held at some other than the usual hour of service. The location of the churches and the minister in charge will be found in the regular announcement list under the various denominational heads:

Baptist—Belden Avenue, 7:45 p. m., song service, A. W. Ekvall; Hyde Park, 8 p. m., cantata, "From Death to Life"; Irving Park, 4:30 p. m., "The Crucifixion"; Normal Park, 7:30, pageant, "How the Light Came"; Rogers Park, 7:45 p. m., "Olivet to Calvary."

Catholic—Cathedral, 11 a. m., Bishop E. F. Hoban, celebrant of mass, Quigley Seminary and Cathedral choirs; St. Patrick's, high mass, 10:45 a. m. and 12:10, J. Lewis Browne, choir of 120 voices and ten special choristers; St. Stanislaus, 2:30, school and girls' choir; Shrine of the Sacred Heart, special musical program at 8 a. m.

Congregationalist — Bird Memorial, 7:45, Sunday school concert; Grayland, 7:45 p. m., cantata, "Death and Life"; Hyde Park, 7:45 p. m., "Her Easter Choice, the Path of the Nazarene"; New First, five choirs and soloists, 10:30 a. m. and 7:45 p. m.; North Shore, 7:45, moving pictures; Wellington Avenue, 7:45, pageant, "The Abundant Life"; Warren Avenue, 7:45 p. m., cantata, "Rabboni."

Disciples (Christian)—Irving Park, 7:45, Bible school Easter program; Ravenswood, 8 p. m. cantata, "Our Living Lord," and 9:45 a. m., children's pageant, "The Challenge of Easter."

Episcopal—Advent, 7:45, "The First Easter"; Ascension, high mass, 11 a. m., Easter music, 7 p. m.; Christ, Woodlawn commandery, Knights Templar, 4:30, "Seven Last Words," 7:45 p. m.; Epiphany, 11 a. m., Bishop C. P. Anderson, pageant, 8 p. m.; Holy Apostles, church school, 3:30 p. m.; Our Savior, 4 p. m., children's flower service; Redeemer, 7:30, evensong, seventy-five voices; St. Barnabas, 4:30, children's festival; St. Bartholomew, solemn evensong, 7:30 p. m.; St. James, 4 p. m., St. Bernard commandery, Knights Templar, Dr. James S. Stone; St. Martin's, 3:30 p. m., Sunday school festival and distribution of plants; St. Paul's, 8 p. m., choir of forty men and boys.

[Gibson, Sykes & Fowler Photo.]

The Rev. Edward F. Rice, former army chaplain, at one time spiritual director of the St. Vincent de Paul society of the Chicago archdiocese, is pastor of Our Lady of Peace Catholic church. He is in the midst of adding to the church already partially built, and is looking forward to its completion. A picture of the church and parish house as finished is shown in the real estate section of today's paper.

Father Rice combined with his duties as head of the St. Vincent de Paul society the work of chaplain and superintendent of St. Joseph's Home for the Friendless. His army experience made him widely known. He was educated at St. Pius' parochial school, St. Ignatius' college, and at Niagara university, New York. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1902. Father Rice was chaplain of the 122d field artillery. His church is located at 79th street and Jeffery avenue.

The Wilmette Baptist church, the Rev. Francis C. Stifler, pastor, will begin today the dedication ceremonies of its new church which has cost to date $131,000. The building is of rubble Illinois limestone, Gothic in style. The pastor will preach the initial sermon this morning at 11 o'clock and dedicate the baptistry in connection with a service of baptism. At 8:15 p. m. Dr. Benjamin Otto will preach and conduct a communion service at which the new communion set will be dedicated. Tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock the Baptist ministers of the Chicago conference will meet in the church. The formal dedication will take place next Sunday morning with a sermon by the Rev. B. Frank Taber, Washington, Pa., the first pastor of the church, and at 3:30 with a sermon by the Rev. W. S. Abernethy, D. D., pastor of Calvary church, Washington, D. C. The concluding ceremonies will be held on May 4.

The corner stone of the First Methodist Episcopal church, Superior street and Oak Park avenue, Oak Park, which is expected to be the finest structure in the denomination in the Chicago area, costing $450,000, will be laid this afternoon at 3:30. The pastor, the Rev. Merle N. English, D.D., will be in charge and will respond to greeting from Willis McFeely, president of the village board, and from the Rev. Roy E. Vale, D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Oak Park. All of the twenty-two organizations of the church will march in the processional, which will be bright with color. The new building will be of cut Bedford stone. One feature will be a memorial tower in honor of the soldiers, and also of the home and foreign missionaries which have gone out from the church. A dinner will be held tomorrow evening in Grace Episcopal church with Dr. Merton S. Rice of Detroit as speaker. Talmadge & Watson are the architects, and Foltz & Brand, associate architects.

The Rev. Charles W. Gilkey, pastor of the Hyde Park Baptist church, will give the Easter address this evening at 8 at the Sunday Evening club at Orchestra hall. His subject will be "Great Expectations." Clifford W. Barnes will speak at 7 o'clock on "What Jesus Stood For." The choir of 100 with special soloists will give a full program of Easter music. Dr. Gilkey is one of the most popular speakers in Chicago. He is a graduate of Harvard university and Union Theological seminary, New York.

Former Governor of Kansas Henry J. Allen, editor of the Wichita Beacon and the "Henry" of the book, "Henry and Me," written by Henry Allen White, will be the speaker next Friday evening at the Drake hotel, under the auspices of the Chicago Methodist Social union. Delegates to the general conference, which opens on May 1 in Springfield, Mass., are expected to be among the guests. R. Clarence Brown, president elect of the social union, is in charge of the banquet arrangements.

SHOES
Imitated but Never Duplicated

THIS LETTER AND POEM WAS RECEIVED FROM ONE OF OUR CUSTOMERS ABOUT OUR "NARO-HEEL" SHOES:

LACOST & SCHWEDLER,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen—

The shoes, as I expected, are just the thing. Would scarcely know what to do if I hadn't had the Narrow Heel Bootery on my list of "where to buys."

The following, written in a burst of enthusiasm over them, is sincere, if nothing more:

"THE NARO-HEEL"

If you're feelin' sort o' grouchy
And can't figure out what ails you,
Just analyze the situation, do.
Ten to one you'll find the trouble,
Ten to one your heart'll bubble,
For it's nothing more than just a faulty shoe.

Faulty shoes are pesky creatures,
And they spoil your disposition.
Don't continue doing things you're bound to rue.
Ten to one the heel's too wide,
Ten to one it rubs your hide—
Now listen, let me tell you what to do:

There's a shoe that's made to fit you,
And the comfort it'll give you
Will really make you feel as good as new.
Simply try 'em, don't decry 'em,
And I'm sure that you will buy 'em—
The one and only perfect-fitting shoe
THE "NARO-HEEL."

THE MOST AUTOMOBILE IN THE WORLD FOR THE MONEY

ACROSS THE CONTINENT - OR AROUND THE BLOCK

OVERLAND is built to travel, and keep traveling—around the town or all over the map. It's as much at home on the trail to the Golden Gate as it is cruising through a city park—and just as reliable!

You hear the word "reliability" tossed about pretty freely in automobile talk—but Overland owners know that "reliability" is built right into every Overland. The car proves its endurance by enduring!

You can go out and spend a whole lot more money for a car. Oh, yes—any amount more. But if you want to save money—if you want to make every dollar buy the biggest possible dollar's worth of service, comfort and pleasure—your money is well placed in an Overland.

The big Overland engine gives you oceans of power—and extreme economy. Patented Triplex Springs give you cradled riding ease—smoothing down the bumps and prolonging the life of the car. A sturdy chassis—rugged Mo-lyb-den-um axle—Auto-Lite electrical equipment—quality and strength throughout! Besides being strong and faithful mechanically, Overland's good looks abide longer. Overland touring car is the only car at or near the price with an all steel body, finished in hard, baked enamel.

Overland keeps down expense. Amazing low upkeep costs have made it possible for the undersigned dealers to make this revolutionary offer: "We will keep any new Overland passenger or commercial car purchased during the month of April, in proper running condition, including labor and parts (excepting only tires, batteries and speedometers which are guaranteed by their manufacturers, and also excepting damage by wrecks or collisions) for an entire year, at a cost of only ten cents a day."

This plan is entirely optional. Many owners report maintenance costs far below this figure! Before you buy any car—see Overland, and try it out in a good long ride.

We present in an entirely new manner—to men in business as well as to the average wage earner—a thrift program which allows him to save for himself in the future through monthly deposits in the Illinois Merchants Trust Company, and at the same time to provide for the future welfare of his business or his family if he should die. The supply of prospects is unlimited, for there is no one who cannot save at least a few dollars a month under our plan.

This is a dignified, profitable, permanent connection for the right man. In Chicago it is identified with one of the largest financial institutions in America, and you need not fear to call back to see your clients. The fact that we already have quite a large number of depositors in Chicago alone shows its appeal. MORE SALESMEN.

Do you know what salesmen make the largest incomes? Reliable life insurance men. Why? Because life insurance is the world's largest business.

The opportunities for selling it are unequaled, and it enables a thinking man to be independent. Circumstances of a very extraordinary nature give us an opportunity to furnish leads—real leads—living, vital leads.

But it is not an easy profession. True.

Are you weary of being on the road, or of the deadly office routine and limited income?

Investigate. We offer an unequaled opportunity, but not every man is fitted for this business; we turned down 52 out of 57 last week.

Learn whether YOU have the real "heart stroke" required for successful salesmanship.

Are you ready to specialize and enter this most important of all professions from a pecuniary and social service standpoint?

See Mr. Glockzin any day before 1 o'clock at Room 615, 11 S. La Salle-st.

Sheridan Beach

Sheridan-rd. at Chase-av.

A MOST DELIGHTFUL HOME.

The SHERIDAN BEACH HOTEL is something more than an apartment building or hotel. It has the substantial atmosphere of dignity and the permanence lacking in the ordinary hotel, and the smooth running and unobtrusive service lacking in the usual apartment building. Truly, the SHERIDAN BEACH has been called "a community of homes without the hotel atmosphere."

Located on the shore of Lake Michigan in beautiful Rogers Park, the SHERIDAN BEACH will commend itself to the man seeking a home environment. The private bathing beach, a beautiful solarium, furnished as an Italian garden; an open air garden; an enclosed lounge on the roof are at his disposal. All this is 25 minutes from the loop on the Evanston elevated [Jarvis-av. station].

Attractive suites, overlooking the lake, of from 1 to 5 rooms, are now available. Maid service, gas, electricity, ice, linen and laundering are all furnished. SUBSTANTIAL REDUCTIONS IN RENTS ARE OFFERED FOR TERM LEASES.

Come in and let us explain to you how really inexpensive it is to live at this beautiful hotel.

Satisfactory references will be required.

THE SHERIDAN BEACH is under the personal management of Mr. Robert H. Borland.

OTHERS HAVE STOPPED PAYING HIGH RENTS

By purchasing their own apartment hundreds of families in Chicago have relieved the pressure of current high rents. You can, too. Investigate The Andridge Plan of co-operative ownership. A small down payment starts you and you pay the balance in monthly installments. Monthly operating expenses will not exceed 50 per cent of normal rental. In 5 years you save more than the original purchase price.

Six buildings now offered under The Andridge Plan in various parts of the city. One in Hyde Park contains only one unsold five room apartment. One on South Shore-drive, ready for occupancy in June, offers a choice of 3, 4, and 5 room homes. Like all Andridge buildings, these are well constructed, planned and equipped for daily comfort, and conveniently near transportation, schools, shops, and recreation centers. YOUR COSTS REDUCE EACH YEAR

When you purchase an apartment home under The Andridge Co-operative Plan your monthly expenses go down each year. For example, the monthly operating expenses on one 4 room apartment in THE MARQUETTE were $43.26 last year. On May 1 of this year the expenses on this apartment drop to $39.81. This is possible because of lower interest payments and good management during the last year.

Visit THE MARQUETTE, 5500-16 Washington-blvd., today and let our representative explain The Andridge Co-operative Plan and tell you exactly how much we can save you each month. Several very desirable apartments still available. Telephone Columbus 6297.

One of Oak Park's most beaut. corners [on Wash.-blvd.]. Can now be purchased at practically the value of the ground. This home was built for the present owner by one of the most reliable builders under the supervision of a high grade architect. It is of Colonial design and is thoroughly well built and has every convenience, including Yaryan [community] heat. On account of change in family, the home is too large for the owner and he must sell. The grounds, 171x110 [171 on blvd., zoned for apartments], are a miniature park and one of the finest in Oak Park, without exception. The price asked is practically the value of the ground, which is becoming more valuable every day on account of scarcity of good corners. This property will provide a beaut. home for your family, with no possibility of depreciation. PRICE AND TERMS on request. Can be shown by appointment.

Kenilworth.

KENILWORTH.

Kenilworth Beach is beautiful these spring days. Because of its unusual location every site in this development affords a view of Lake Michigan. Search the North Shore and you will find that nowhere else are you offered highly restricted residential sites in the best environment, 75 feet wide and 160 feet deep, within several thousand dollars of the low prices still in effect in Kenilworth Beach. Only those who intend to build are invited to purchase. Out of 5,200 feet of frontage in this SHOW PLACE of the North Shore, only a tenth remains unsold. When that tenth is sold, where can you duplicate this opportunity?

We have 500 ft. of frontage on Raleigh-rd., within 2 blocks of the lake, with all improvements in and paid for—five sites, each 100x175 ft. If they were in Wilmette the price would be $150 to $175 a front ft. They are offered for a limited time at $125 a ft.

A Kenilworth corner, dominating in its beauty and location, 3 blocks west of the lake; fine trees; black loam soil; a lot that deserves treatment by a real architect and a house that is up to the highest standards. Only $140 a ft.

HOUSES:

One of those rare opportunities for a strictly modern home at an unusually fair price—a big house, too. The decorations are just finished throughout, and there is nothing omitted in artistic detail. The location is about central between the lake and depot; reasonably near schools and churches. 10 rm. house, 3 baths, garage. Lot 100x193 ft., with wonderful full growth elm trees, a fountain, a superb lawn, shrubs, flowers, etc. The price is only $37,500, and there are terms. Quick or delayed possession. Excellent reason for selling this charming home.

A $38,000 bargain. Stone and stucco house, overlooking the lake; 4 bedrooms, 3 baths, garage. Under close consideration and apt to be sold any day now. See it Sunday.

Used Cars of the Better Grades

Nowhere in Chicago can used cars of the better grades be bought at prices that are fairer than here.

All cars that are offered for sale by us are carefully inspected and tested to determine what is required in reference to repairs or painting to make them 100% in appearance and performance.

The same consideration is given by us to the sale of a used car as if it were a new one, for the very good reason that a large percentage of our new car sales are made to people who originally purchased used cars from us last year or the year before.

Used cars are not traded in to us on new ones. They are left with us for sale. The price that they are to be sold for is determined by us after careful consideration as to model, condition, mileage, popularity, and other considerations.

We are not bound by the fact that we were out-traded by the new car buyer or competition and forced to pass the result of the bad trade on to the used car purchaser.

Neither is it necessary for us to camouflage the car as to repairs or paint by tuning up and varnishing a car that needs overhauling and a burned off paint job. We charge that against the owner of same and ask you to pay only what the car is reasonably worth.

There are no so-called bargains in our stock, nor is the word "bargain" ever used by our salesmen in connection with used cars. It follows naturally that we have only one price on used cars and that plainly marked so all can see, and is arrived at as per the above explanation. You will agree, we are sure, that it is difficult to determine just what is a bargain, especially in view of the fact that two used cars of exactly the same make and model will vary in price, or should, because of the fact that two different owners used them. One may have been not only a hard driver but a careless one as to the upkeep of same, while, on the other hand, the other owner may have been particularly careful, which fact reflects in his car.

On our plan of arriving at values, the careless fellow must either pay to put his car in shape or take less for it. In no event are you expected to stand for this.

GUARANTEE

To all intents and purposes, any and all used cars offered by us are in good mechanical and serviceable condition and are priced commensurate with what they represent in value.

The owner of same agrees to abide by our decision as to same. However, in the event we should sell a car to you that afterward proved to be other than represented as to condition or value, we will gladly permit you to return same to us to be corrected either as to mechanical defect or exchanged for any other car in stock.

The above guarantee is limited only as to a reasonable length of time.

We make no money on used cars, and unless we can make of you a permanent customer with a reasonable chance of some day selling you a new car whereby we can make a profit, we could not afford to sell you at such low prices.

Our stock at this time is very complete, varied, and attractive.

For your convenience we will be open Sunday and evenings until nine o'clock.

TERMS TO RESPONSIBLE PARTIES.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

All our used cars are sent to the Automotive Testing Laboratories [A. T. L.—a division of the Chicago Automobile Trade Association] to be tested and approved for their mechanical perfection. This is protection to both owner and dealer and the final solution of the used car problem. Ask us for fuller information or, better still, bring in your car to us and we will arrange for a test at the laboratories where you can actually see your car examined.

Dollar for dollar values in dependable used cars.

More than a thousand satisfied owners of our reconditioned Type 61 Cadillacs tell us that no better used car values can be found today.

Thoroughly repainted; equipped with 5 new cord tires; put in A1 condition mechanically; top, upholstering and head linings carefully cleaned. These cars represent such excellent value that we sell them under the regular 90 day new car warranty.

The reconditioning is done entirely in our own shop by Cadillac craftsmen trained in their work.

Come in and inspect our stock of open and enclosed models. We are glad to show them to you and if you are interested in seeing the reconditioning in actual process will be equally pleased to take you through our service department.

WORLD'S LARGEST BUILDING NOW IS SEARS-ROEBUCK

Chicago Still Leads in W. L. B. Contest.

Entries still are being received for the "world's largest building" contest, unintentionally inaugurated by the American Furniture Mart interests when they claimed some time ago that it was the W. L. B. Immediately larger and still larger buildings came to light. The Mart slid farther and farther back in the list.

Yesterday it was discovered by Alfred J. Sweeny of 7 East Oak street, that the Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s west side main merchandise building might have a claim. The architects, George C. Nimmons & Co., through Clark C. Wright of that firm, confirmed it when it was stated that this huge nine story structure contains 32,700,000 cubic feet, making it apparently the world's largest. This does not include the printing and other buildings.

A couple of weeks ago it was discovered that the Marshall Field retail store, not including "the store for men," supposedly was the largest structure in the world, with 28,000,000 cubic feet. The Equitable in New York contains 24,000,000 and the new Palmer house will have 21,500,000.

Piano Firm Rents Space on Boulevard in New Straus

Kranich & Bach, piano dealers, for many years on Wabash, have leased two salesrooms on the first floor of the Straus building, east of the Jackson boulevard entrance, with additional space on the floor below, making a total of 4,000 square feet, for ten years, with a yearly minimum guarantee and a percentage of gross sales. Alfred Stone of Lee J. Lesser & Co. represented the lessee.

Blankley Homestead to Make Way for Apartments

The old homestead of F. W. Blankley, manager of W. E. Harmon & Co., at 503 Brair place, and for over twenty years occupied by his family, is to be wrecked and a $130,000 six room apartment building erected from plans by William Bernhard. Completion date is set for Oct 1.

Start Work on Automobile Building at Michigan-37th

FIFTY-TWO FLATS FOR OAK PARK.

REAL ESTATE NEWS

TWO CLUBS JOIN IN $3,000,000 BUILDING PLAN

American Athletic Buys Grand Boulevard Site.

BY AL CHASE.

It's getting so that it's a dull week that doesn't produce a two or three million dollar athletic club project for some section outside the loop. This week we've got an organization, composed of two big south side projects, which we've already told about, which involves the erection of a $3,000,000 club house on Chicago's newest drive, the extension of Grand boulevard.

It'll be at the northeast corner of Grand and 25th street and will be called the American Athletic club. It is a merger of the Automotive club project, told about last December on this page, planned for Grand and 23d, and the American Athletic club, announced for the southwest corner of Michigan and 33d.

To Be Fifteen Stories.

A site fronting 250 feet on 25th and 127 on Grand boulevard was bought from the Magill-Weinsheimer company for a reported $150,000, through George F. Iliff of the Bowes Realty company. Architect Alfred S. Alschuler has drawn plans for a fifteen story club house which, in addition to the usual athletic and social features, will have 500 sleeping rooms for members and guests.

According to Harry J. Culross, chairman of the organization committee, with headquarters at 3323 South Michigan, half the $3,000,000 necessary to build the club can be obtained from memberships. A considerable sum already has been obtained in that way.

Membership Limited to 5,000.

Membership will be limited to 4,200 resident and 800 non-resident members, divided into six classes: perpetual life, charter, annual-resident, annual-nonresident, army and navy, and athletic.

A separate department for the wives and children of members will be provided. This will consist of separate foyer, reception and lounge rooms, dining rooms and also separate gymnasium and swimming tank. A large roof garden is planned and a $100,000 garage.

To Have Old English Grill.

Some of the other features planned are an old English grill and coffee shop; assembly hall for conventions, private theatricals, musicals, dancing, etc.; regulation size swimming pool, large enough to hold national and international contests, with seating space for spectators.

Frank E. Scott is president; Dr. Lewis W. Bremerman is vice president; S. H. Adams, treasurer, and Raymond Branch is secretary.

Building Permits

There were nineteen building permits issued yesterday for a total value of $413,500, with eleven of them for $5,000 or more. Those at or over $10,000 were:

Ridgeland-av., 7736; 2 story brick apartment; A. Dixon, owner and carp.; A. Foster, arch.; J. B. Aamodt Co., mason	$10,000
Cornell-av., 7201-03; 3 story brick apartment; A. Zanglein, owner; J. Lewis, arch.; C. Scheyer, mason	50,000
Grenshaw-st., 3900; 3 story brick flats; C. Resenberg, owner; Eisenberg, arch.; S. Bada, mason; L. Rubin, carp	35,000
Laramie-av., S., 400-08; 3 story brick stores and apartments; R. D. Wolinsky, owner and carp.; M. M. Fishman, arch.; M. A. Alter & Son, carp	150,000
Robey-st., S., 10044-48; 2 story brick residence; T. N. Wallace, owner; E. A. Blendin, arch.; S. Sonldyer, mason; P. Hreff, carp	20,000
Halsted-st., S., 1006-08; 2 story brick store and office shop; I. N. Klein, owner; M. I. Moorehouse, arch.; J. L. Stoller, mason	56,000
Seventy-fifth-st., E., 557-57; 2 story brick store and apartment; Baulshanis-Kapsulis, owner; Oldefest-Williams, archs.; A. T. Herling, mason; Olsen Bros., carp	20,000

HOTEL FOR NORTH DEARBORN.

George C. Schmitz of Racine, Wis., will erect a three story hotel building at 1017-21 North Dearborn, lot 75x150, from plans by Rissman & Hirschfeld. There'll be 111 furnished rooms and four shops.

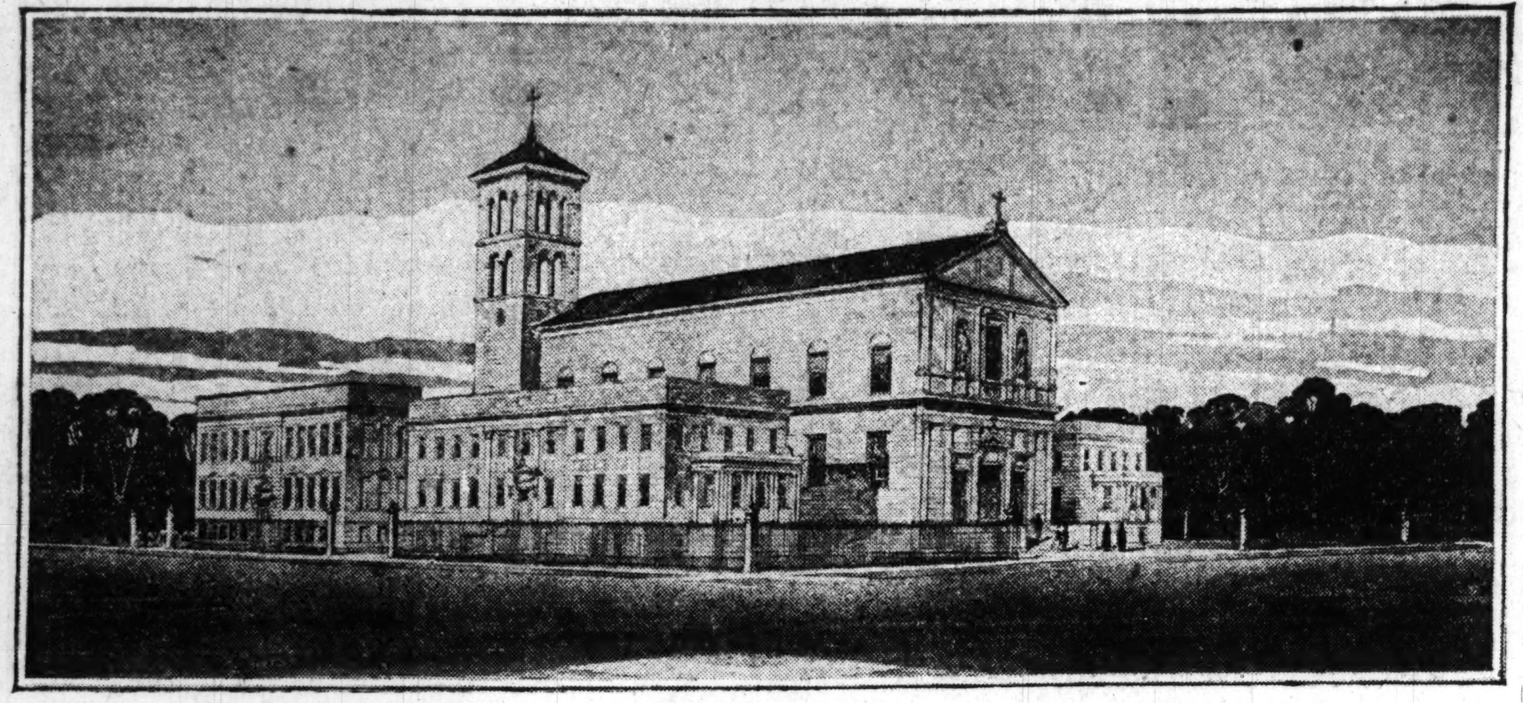
WOODLAWN FLATS LEASED.

Frances M. Givens has leased the twenty-four flats at 1500 East 63d for ten years at a term rental of $168,000, through C. H. Humphrey of Whiteside & Wentworth.

CAMERA COMPANY LEASES SHOP.

The Shutan Camera company has leased the store at 173 West Washington and will move from No. 155 in the same block on May 1. Richard Fischer and Abner Goldenson were attorneys.

$800,000 Group for Our Lady of Peace Parish on South Side



Architect Joe W. McCarthy designed the above $800,000 group of buildings for Our Lady of Peace parish, now under construction on the north side of 79th, extending from Jeffery to Chappel avenue. Every building will be of Bedford stone, designed in the Italian renaissance style of architecture. The group will consist of a church seating 1,000, a school accommodating 900 pupils, a rectory for the pastor and assistants, a convent accommodating twenty sisters, and a central heating plant. All will be fireproof.

Part of the school, shown on the reader's left in the above picture, fronting on Jeffery, already is completed. Work will now continue on the second wing of the school, extending through to Chappel avenue, on the priests' house and on the basement of the church. The convent will be just east of the main entrance to the church, shown on the right in the above picture. The rectory will be west of the church.

An odd coincidence is that the pastor of Our Lady of Peace is the "fighting parson," the Rev. E. F. Rice, late chaplain of the 122d field artillery. A picture of him probably will be shown in Dr. Norton's department in this issue.

REALTY BOARD HEAD SETS COPS ON "SUB" FENDER FLIPPERS

HENRY G. ZANDER
[Walinger Photo.]

Henry G. Zander, president of the Chicago Real Estate board and one of Chicago's largest and best known subdividers, doesn't allow his own salesmen to indulge in the popular pastime of fender flipping for prospective customers. Last Sunday on Peterson road he was importuned to buy a lot by various individuals who secured his ear by the simple method of flagging his car and then hopping the running board.

After the fourth had stopped him he called up the Irving Park police and asked for a motor cop. The captain asked if he'd prosecute.

"I sure will," said Mr. Zander.

The captain sent two coppers. Mr. Zander rode about the rest of the morning without being molested.

At the Wednesday meeting of the Northwestern L Development association Mr. Zander endorsed the move of the Niles Center subdividers to stop fender flipping and otherwise inaugurate an era of clean salesmanship.

An ordinance is being prepared by the association's attorney, George Brennan, for the village council to provide a penalty for stopping cars to secure lot customers.

News of the Architects

Practically the entire number of The Western Architect in its current issue, that of March, is devoted to the architectural work of a Chicago firm, the Barry, Byrne & Ryan company, with many illustrations of both interiors and exteriors of their work.

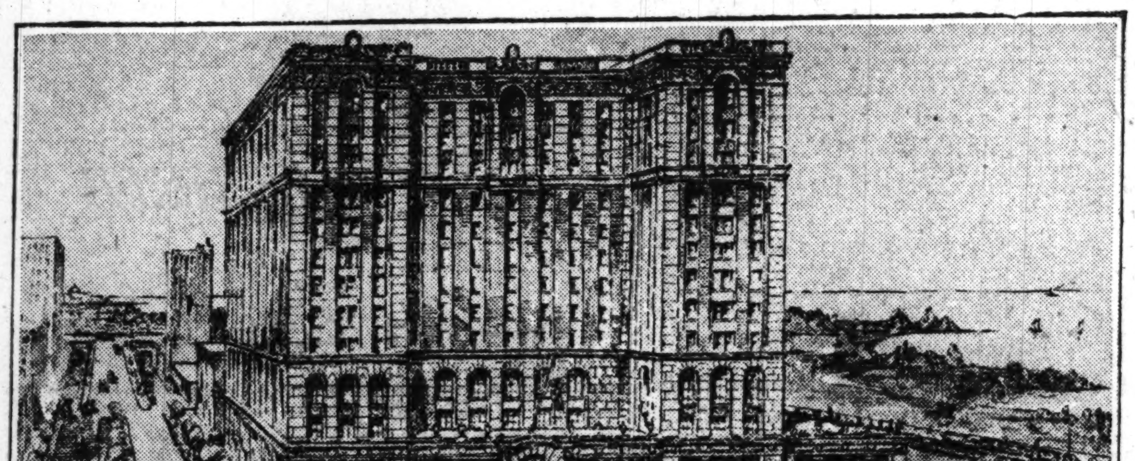
The Kocher & Larson Company, Inc., architects, now at 6205 South Halsted street, will move on May 1 to 6405 South Halsted, according to Ben Larson, secretary of the company. Jacques J. Kocher is president.

Joseph Cohen & Co. will move tomorrow from 140 North Dearborn to larger quarters in the new Burnham building, suite 811. Their new phones will be Central 3129-30-31.

BUYS SAUSAGE PLANT.

Shirley S. Abedor has bought the Sidney Siegel sausage plant, at 1139 West 47th, for a reported $30,000. Decker & Golden were attorneys.

South Central District's New Club



This is the preliminary sketch by Architect Alfred S. Alschuler of the $3,000,000 American Athletic club for the northeast corner of Grand boulevard and 25th street. The above picture gives one the impression of being a thirteen story building, but the club officials say that two of the stories shown are double, which makes it fifteen, as told in the adjoining story.

Buy Congress and Halsted Corner for a Hotel Site

Anthony and Nicholas V. Deligiannis have bought the southwest corner of Congress and Halsted, improved with an old store and hotel building, from Jennie E. Waters for an indicated $85,000 and intend to erect a $250,000 fireproof hotel and store building. The lot is 75x125. Miltenberg & Guettel were brokers. Harold A. Fein and Deming, Jarrett & Mulfinger were attorneys.

$500,000 "Tower" Flats to Overlook Jackson Park

Work has started on a $500,000 three story seventy-five flat building on 67th, between Constance and Cregier, by Gideon W. Turnquist. It will have two, three, and four room suites and will be called the Tower apartments. Completion is set for Sept. 1. S. W. Straus & Co. have financed it.

MASONIC CORPORATION TO MOVE.

The United Masonic corporation will move to the ninth floor of the Cunard building on or about May 1, as their present quarters are to be wrecked. Edwin W. Farnham of Farnham, Kuhn & Co., was broker.

18 ARCHITECTS PLAN HOMES FOR MODEL STREET

Every House Different in Sauganash.

Eighteen American architects have contributed designs to a street of model houses, thirty-two in number, now nearing completion in one of Chicago's most attractive subdivision properties, Koester & Zander's "Sauganash in the Woods."

This annual method of showing prospective home owners that they don't have to live in humdrum, commonplace looking houses, similar in nearly every respect to their neighbors' homes, was instituted by Henry G. Zander, president of the Chicago Real Estate board.

Every House Different.

The houses, each one entirely different, are on 40, 60, and 80 foot lots on both sides of Kostner avenue, between Peterson and Rogers avenues. They will sell for from $8,500 to $10,000, which will be at cost plus 10 per cent, which Mr. Zander says doesn't actually cover the overhead. They'll all be ready about June 1.

These thirty-two model homes are preliminary to a $1,000,000 house building campaign which Koester & Zander intend to carry out gradually in Sauganash. They'll build at least 100 residences.

250 Acres in All.

Sauganash by the way, is said to be the largest subdivision in the city for single dwelling houses. It covers 250 acres in all. All improvements are in in about eighty acres and sewers are in on part of the balance. All improvements are to be installed in the entire 250 acres as fast as possible.

An attractive station already has been built on the Chicago & Northwestern railroad at Peterson avenue and the road has promised to give service when the patronage warrants it. The subdivision is bounded on the south by Caldwell and Rogers, partly on the west by Cicero and extends north to a point beyond Devon.

Buy Entire Block of 61st Street Frontage

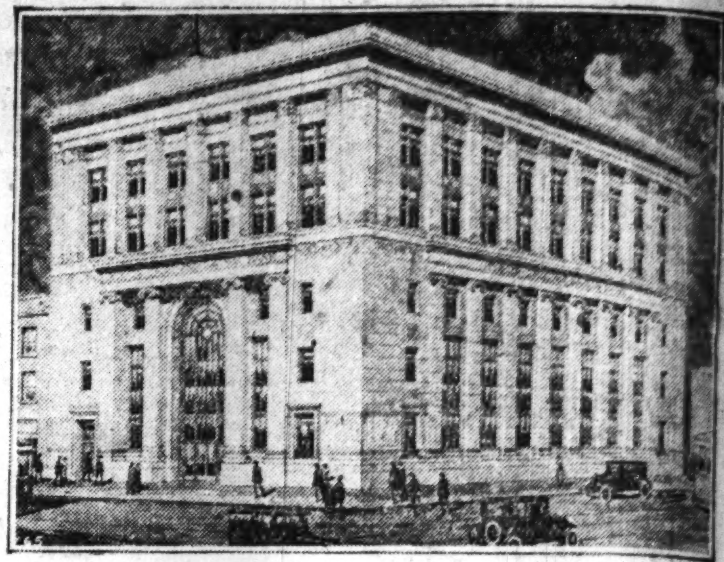
S. J. Rosenblatt, north shore park commissioner, and Dr. Zan D. Klopper have secured the entire block of north frontage on 61st between South Park and Vernon, improved with one and two story buildings. The reported price for the 283 feet of frontage was $148,500, subject to $90,000.

The new owners intend to add a story to the one story buildings, to contain lodge halls and offices. Loewenberg & Loewenberg are the architects. Arrangements are said to be under way for new lighting standards in the neighborhood. Leo Raemer was broker in the above transactions. Max M. Korshak was attorney.

MAKE $742,000 LOANS.

E. G. Krumrine & Co. report having negotiated twelve loans, aggregating $742,000, at rates ranging from 5½ to 6 per cent.

Pioneer Trust & Savings Bank Building



One of Chicago's largest outlying bank buildings will be the Pioneer Trust and Savings bank, as shown above, to be erected at the northwest corner of North and Crawford, on the site of the present Pioneer State bank, which recently was consolidated with the Scheubert & Amberg State bank. The new building will cost $650,000 and will occupy a site 83 feet on North and 125 feet on Crawford.

The present bank building will be moved across the street and business will be conducted as usual while it is being shifted. The two upper floors will be rented for offices, the bank using the balance of the building. The exterior will be of marble with polished granite base. The main banking floor will be thirty-nine feet high. K. M. Vitzthum & Co. were selected from twelve local and New York architects who submitted tentative sketches.

ALBERT H. WETTEN
[Walinger Photo.]

Albert H. Wetten & Co. moved yesterday from the Woman's Temple building, where they had been for two decades, to much larger quarters in the new Illinois Merchants bank building. They will occupy suite 1585, which is in the southwest corner of the building, overlooking La Salle street and Jackson boulevard. Their new phone will be State 3390. Mr. Wetten has dodged the usual moving worries by going to California for a month.

Wallace Reid, formerly in the real estate department of the Northern Trust, is now associated with J. Beidler Camp & Co., who have moved from the fifth to the seventh floor of 40 North Dearborn. The new phones are State 4416-17-18. The firm now includes Mr. Camp, John R. Anderson, and Mr. Reid.

Lloyd M. Landeker, chain stores leasing, has moved his offices to suite 710 Westminster building, where he has larger quarters. His new phones are State 2840-41.

Myron S. Willens, formerly of Sevin & Willens, builders, and the North Shore Realty company, will move tomorrow to the Burnham building, room 811. His new phones will be Central 3129-30-31. He will transact his realty business under the name of the Willens Realty company and building work under Lypski & Willens.

William F. Fox & Co. have opened their new office at 7057 Wentworth avenue.

Friedman Brothers have taken larger office space in the American Bond & Mortgage building, suite 808.

Mussil, Burian & Co. have moved to 1574 North Halsted, at the southwest corner of North avenue.

D. C. Malin and W. H. Scheld, formerly with McKinnie & Co., operating in the Main street district of Evanston, have formed the real estate firm of Malin & Scheld, with offices at 907 Chicago avenue, Evanston. Their phone is Evanston 233.

CHICAGO RIDING CLUB TO HAVE THIRD STORY; WILL COST $100,000

Architects Rebori, Wentworth & Dewey have just completed plans for the enlargement of the Chicago Riding club house, now under construction at Ontario, McClurg and Ohio. A third floor, to cost $100,000, is to be added at each end, overlooking the ring. This will enable the club to have a café, several special club rooms, and a roof garden. The café will have windows opening on to the ring, and so will the special club rooms. Work is being rushed on the club and several near north side building records are being broken.

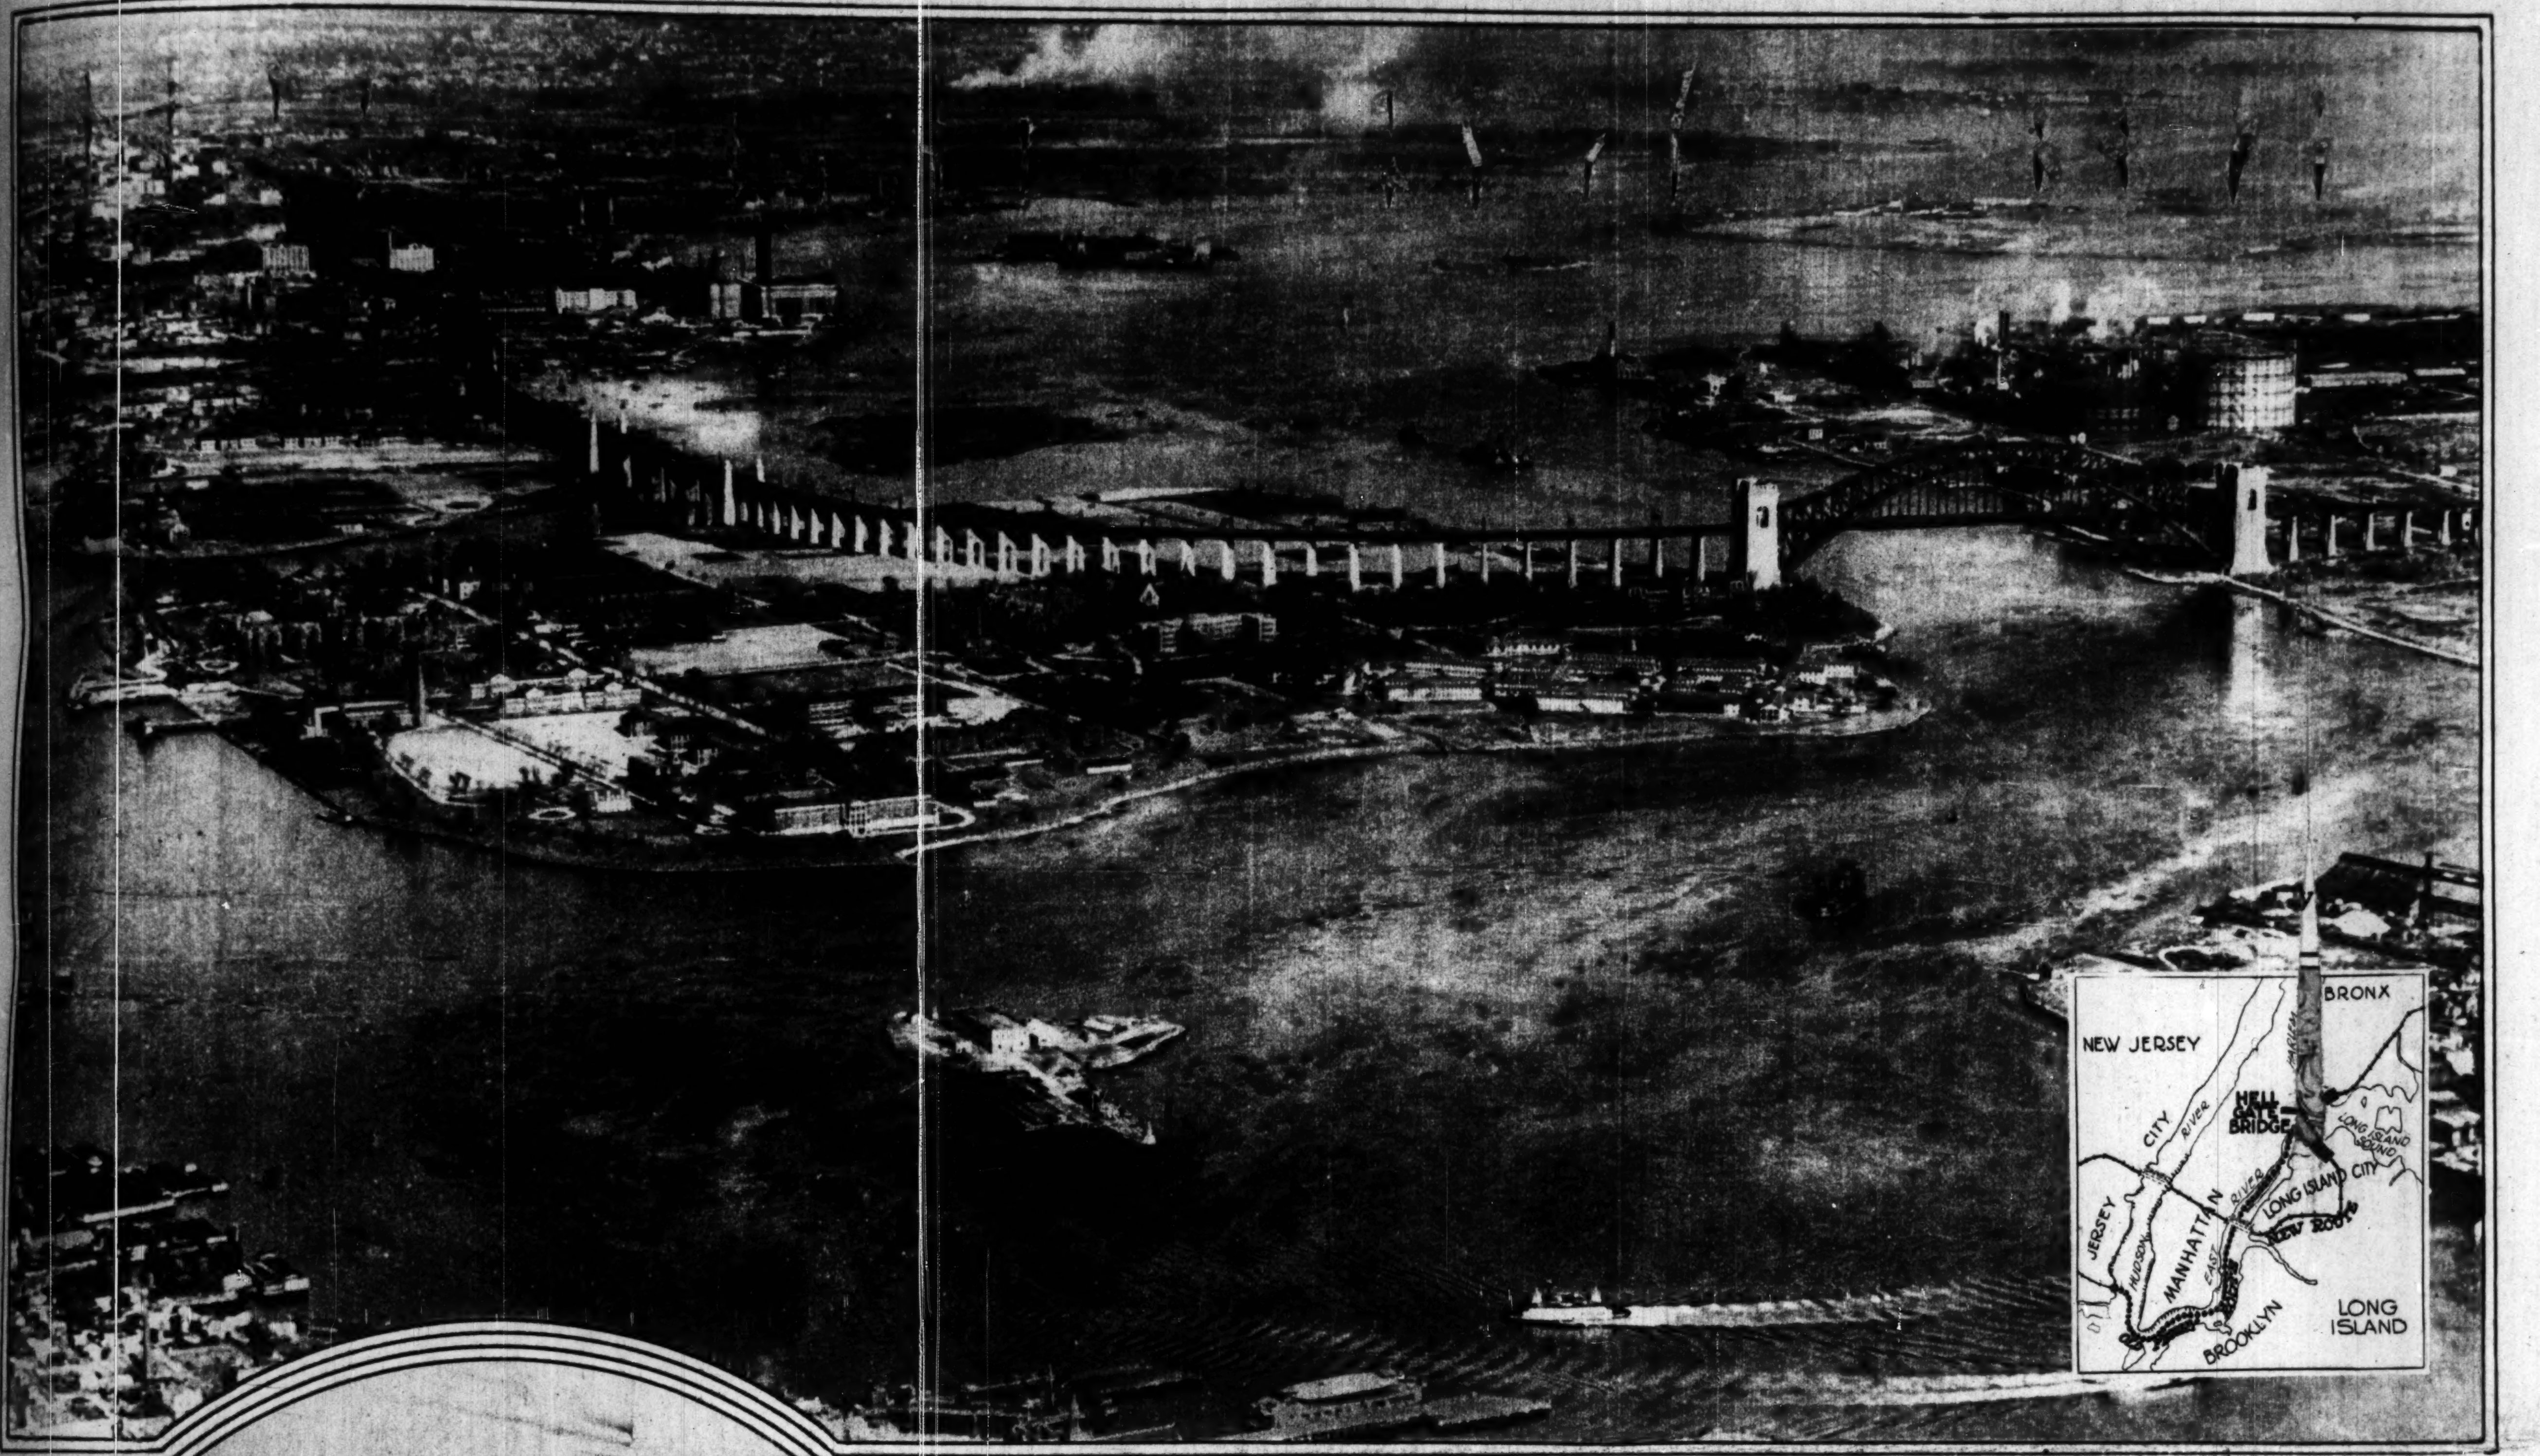
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

April 20, 1924



CUTTING HOURS INTO MINUTES—A remarkable view of Hell Gate bridge, which permits trains from New England points bound for the south to cross Long Island sound from the Bronx, and thence by tunnel under the East and Hudson rivers, to New Jersey. Formerly it was necessary to ferry the trains around to Jersey City, from where they proceeded on their southward course. No statistician has come forward with the exact figures on the aggregate time saved, but amateurs have estimated it is a year or two every day or two. This unusual picture was taken by Maj. Hamilton Maxwell from an aeromarine boat.

READY? SERVE!—Annette Kellermann, the "diving Venus," participated in the recent women's tennis tournament at Los Angeles, and she and her partner were "runners up." Miss Kellermann is shown in the act of cutting one over the net.

SHIP IN FLAMES AT SEA—The steamer E. D. Kinsley and its crew barely managed to make port at Astoria, Ore., when the cargo of shingles caught fire as the vessel was fifty-five miles out from San Francisco. It was thought at first it would be necessary to sink the ship in shallow water to extinguish the flames, but firemen finally won their battle, as shown by the picture.

Millions suffer from Acid Decay at THE DANGER LINE which often results in the loss of health and destruction of teeth and gums

ACIDS form in your mouth by the fermentation of tiny food particles which lodge at the gum margins. These acids attack your teeth, causing Acid Decay.

The relentless enemy of your teeth and gums

Acid Decay begins most readily in places where your tooth-brush does not reach. It is especially serious at the place where the hard enamel stops and the soft bone of the teeth is exposed by receding gums. This is The Danger Line.

Once decay begins at The Danger Line, it progresses rapidly to the roots of the teeth, causing abscesses. The gums become infected and pyorrhea may develop. Poisons from these conditions undermine your health and frequently cause the loss of teeth, rheumatism, heart-disease and other serious troubles.

Everyone must fight Acid Decay

It is impossible to have sound teeth and gums—or even perfect bodily health, unless Acid Decay is stopped at The Danger Line.

Ordinary dentifrices will not prevent Acid Decay. To do this it is necessary to counteract mouth acids.

Dentists and physicians have long known milk of magnesia to be the best product available to neutralize mouth acidity. But how to combine it in the most convenient form for mouth hygiene was not known.

This problem has been solved by the Squibb Laboratories. Squibb's Dental Cream is made with Squibb's Milk of Magnesia, pleasantly flavored. It combines the acid-neutralizing power of milk of magnesia—plus every ingredient necessary to care for the teeth and gums correctly.

Brushing your teeth with Squibb's Dental Cream protects them from Acid Decay at The Danger Line—and elsewhere. It aids in the removal of dental mucin, cleansing and polishing the teeth beautifully. It allays the sensitiveness of acid-eroded or otherwise decayed teeth, and is beneficial to irritated gums.

Begin to use Squibb's Dental Cream to-day

No other dentifrice combines the same advantages. You and all your family will prefer Squibb's Dental Cream—not only because it really does prevent Acid Decay—but because of the true feeling of cleanliness it brings. If your druggist cannot supply you, mail us the coupon on the left with ten cents for a generous size trial tube.

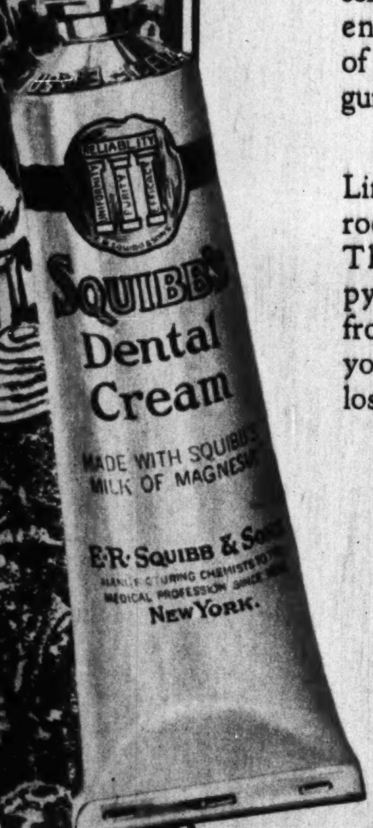
SQUIBB'S DENTAL CREAM

Made with Squibb's Milk of Magnesia



Squibb's Milk of Magnesia

is one of the most popular as well as the blandest of alkalis. It owes its medicinal value chiefly to its property of counteracting acidity. Other products neutralize acids, but most of them are injurious to the tissues of the body. Squibb's Milk of Magnesia, however, is the one ideal antacid as, being insoluble, it is but weakly active until it comes into contact with an acid. This releases its strength in just sufficient quantity to counteract the acid present.

Buy it in small or large bottles from your druggist

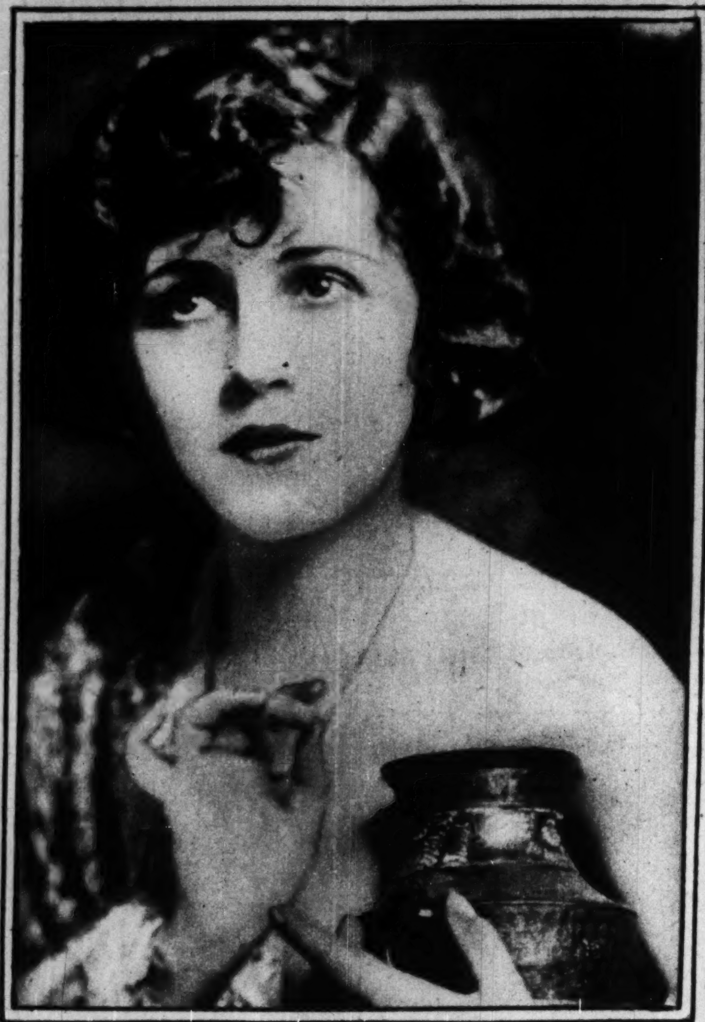
A STRANGE SHIPLOAD ON A STRANGE SHIP—Charon's ferry it is, in somewhat modernized guise, and the passengers are crossing to confront the Great Examiner and have their passports vised for heaven or hell. In short, they are dead. But it's all in a play—"Outward Bound," one of the season's oddest theatrical offerings in New York. The players, from left to right, are J. M. Kerrigan, Charlotte Granville, Beryl Mercer, Eugene Powers, Alfred Lunt, Leslie Howard, Margalo Gillmore, and Lyonel Watts.



$250,000 FOR HER LOST BEAUTY is what Helene Jesmer, former "Follies" girl, asks in her suit against Philip Morgan Plant, trial of which began in New York the other day. Plant, the youthful heir to the millions of the late Morton F. Plant, shipping magnate, was at the wheel when his car was wrecked in 1920 and Miss Jesmer's face, she claims, was hopelessly disfigured. She now asks recompense for the sudden end of her stage career.

The Secret of Better Health

Clearer skin · Easier digestion · Regular elimination

THESE remarkable reports are typical of thousands of similar tributes to Fleischmann's Yeast.

There is nothing mysterious about its action. It is not a "cure-all," not a medicine in any sense. But when the body is choked with the poisons of constipation—or when its vitality is low so that skin, stomach and general health are affected—this simple, natural food achieves literally amazing results.

Concentrated in every cake of Fleischmann's Yeast are millions of tiny yeast-plants, alive and active. At once they go to work—invigorating the whole system, clearing the skin, aiding digestion, strengthening the intestinal muscles and making them healthy and active. Health is yours once more.

"AT the age of forty I found myself slipping in health. I was troubled with indigestion, constipation and nervous debility. I had read about people taking Fleischmann's Yeast, and ordered some. A while later, in answer to a friend's inquiry, I was surprised to hear myself reply, 'I feel like a prize-fighter' and realized then that I had not felt any sign of indigestion for some time, and was putting in ten to twelve hours' hard brain work daily. I knew I was back again."

(A letter from Mr. W. L. King of Washington, D. C.

"WHEN all the other girls were wearing their first low-necked dresses, I was staying at home—all on account of a breaking-out on my back that I simply couldn't get rid of. Dad is a druggist so I tried all the medicated soaps and creams that he had in stock, but finally gave up. It was awful. One day my chum told me about Fleischmann's Yeast and urged me to take it. I took half a cake dissolved in water before every meal—it is not only easy to take but delightful—and in two weeks every trace of the eruption had disappeared. It worked like magic, really, and made me feel like a different person."

(A letter from Miss Esther Shaw of Sanford, Calif.)

"WHEN I commenced to eat yeast about two years ago, I was the grouchiest grouch that ever nursed a grouch. My complexion looked the color of bread dough and I realized that my Nemesis was that curse of mankind—constipation. About every cathartic on the market went through my system. My grocer suggested that I give Fleischmann's Yeast a trial. Since I began eating it my bowels function perfectly night and morning—the proverbial kitten has nothing on me for sound slumber. I do not claim Yeast to be a universal 'cure-all'—but it certainly gave me an excellent start on the road to health."

(A letter from Mr. Cyril A. Gendermann of 1022 Tenth Avenue, Brooklyn)

"CAME a period of real worry; of haphazard living; of irregular sleep and diet. The result . . . a distressing case of nerves . . . misery from my digestive system, a rough and unclear skin. When someone suggested yeast I laughed. . . . Secretly I tried it, and now, knowing how simple the remedy, I laugh at nerves, scorn a skin that is not smooth and clear, and find my digestive system a thing to be ignored."

(Mrs. Betty Knight of Los Angeles, Calif.)

"THIS is what the doctor told me, 'Your husband is run down; . . . he has overworked and eaten so irregularly, and taken so little notice of his physical condition that now he is a very sick man.' . . . At the end of the second week's yeast treatment digestion was improved, and constipation relieved. For six months he ate three cakes each day, and no doubt he owes his complete recovery to the fact that he was so steadfast in following this treatment."

(Mrs. St. Chrisman of Richmond, Indiana)

EAT
FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST FOR HEALTH

Dissolve one cake in a glass of water (just hot enough to drink)

—before breakfast and at bedtime. Fleischmann's Yeast, when taken this way, is especially effective in overcoming or preventing constipation.

Or eat 2 or 3 cakes a day—spread on bread or crackers—dissolved in fruit juices or milk—or eat it plain.

Fleischmann's Yeast comes only in the tinfoil package—it cannot be purchased in tablet form. All grocers have it. Start eating it today! A few days' supply will keep as well in your ice box as in the grocer's. Write us for further information or for a free copy of our latest booklet on Yeast for Health. Address: Health Research Dept. 585, The Fleischmann Company, 701 Washington St., New York.

Would You Like

Prettier teeth — teeth without dingy film?

You see glistening teeth wherever you look today. You envy them, perhaps. Why not ask for this ten-day test and learn how people get them?

Millions are now brushing teeth in a new way. You will adopt it when you know. Please learn how much it means to you and yours.

Film mars beauty

That viscous film you feel on teeth is what makes teeth unsightly. Much of it clings and stays. No ordinary tooth paste can effectually combat it.

Soon that film discolors, then forms dingy coats. That is why teeth lose luster.

Film also holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay. Germs breed by millions in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Hardly one in fifty escaped such troubles under old ways of tooth brushing.

Protect the Enamel

Pepsodent disintegrates the film, then removes it with an agent far softer than enamel. Never use a film combatant which contains harsh grit.

Dental science has now found better methods. It has found two ways to fight film. One disintegrates the film at all stages of formation. One removes it without harmful scouring.

A new-type tooth paste was created to apply these methods daily. The name is Pepsodent. Leading dentists everywhere began to advise its use. Now careful people of some 50 nations employ this method daily.

The added effects

Pepsodent brings some added effects which research proved essential. It multiplies the alkalinity of the saliva, also its starch digestant. These are Nature's great tooth-protecting agents in the mouth. Each use of Pepsodent gives them multiplied effect.

These results are all-important. Together they are bringing to millions of homes a new dental era. Your people should enjoy it.

Don't Carry Baby in Your Arms

IT is not healthful for Baby. And it certainly is hard on Mother. It robs auto rides, train trips, and the like, of all pleasure for them both.

It is no longer necessary, thanks to the Kozekar, the modern baby conveyance which meets perfectly every need for Baby's comfort anywhere, in the auto, street car, train, apartment, on the street—everywhere. It means complete, every-minute comfort for Baby—and it is so much easier for Mother.

In motoring you may stand the Kozekar in the tonneau or swing the basket between the seats—either means increased comfort and safety for both Baby and Mother.

The running gear folds easily, quickly and is light to carry. The straps on the basket make a convenient handle—you need not take Baby out of the basket to enter cars or on stairs.

The Kozekar serves as a perfect bed, bassinette or cradle for Baby. It is as roomy as the largest reed carriage, yet weighs only one-third as much. It is the most comfortable thing for Baby ever invented.

Don't let anyone put you off. If your dealer can't show you the Kozekar or tries to sell you something else, write us. Wonderfully interesting booklet free to mothers. Just send your name and address.

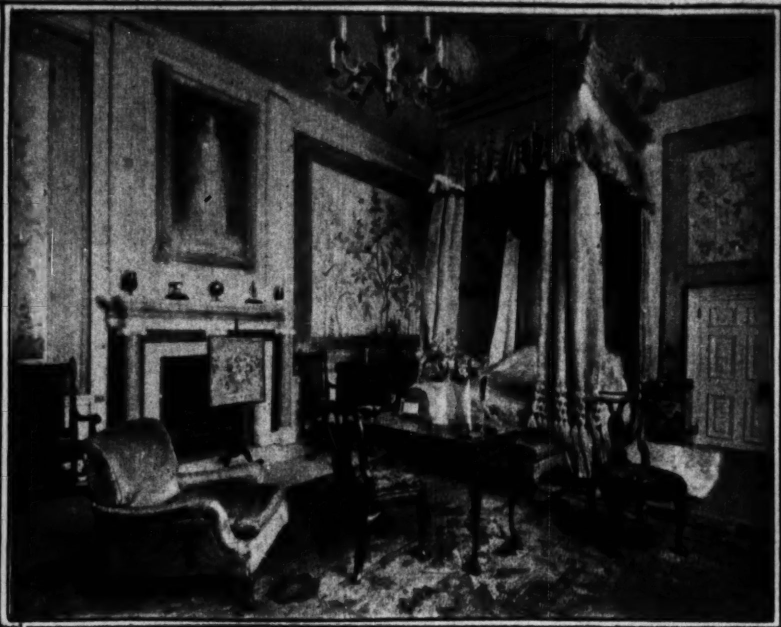
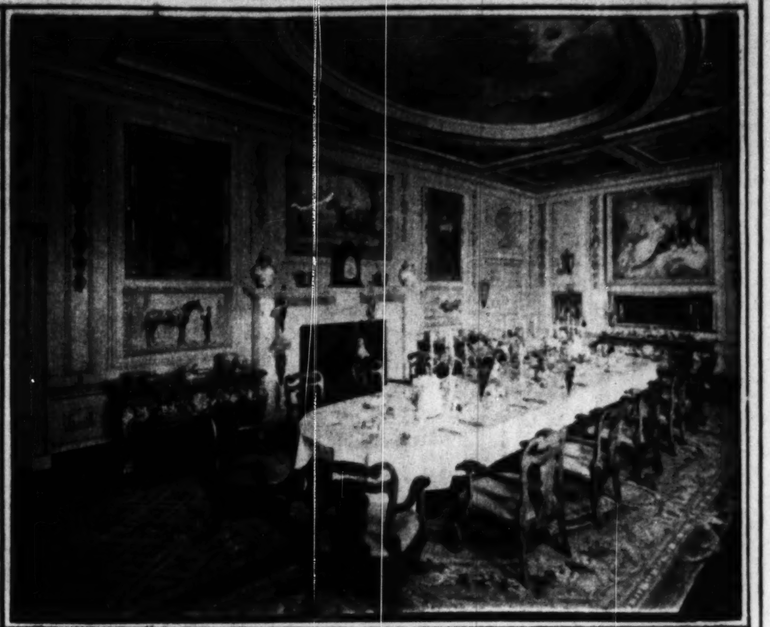
THIS MARVELOUS MANSION IN MINIATURE, known as the Queen's Doll House, has been built by the most famous artists and designers in London for display at the Wembley Park exhibition. It is 5 feet high, 8½ feet long, and calculated to win the heart of every girl in the world who ever "played house." The walls are made to rise, revealing the wonders of the interior, all cunningly devised on a scale of exactly one inch to a foot, and the garden in front folds up and slides into the basement, as does a garage in the rear. There's an elevator which works, electric lights, and everything. The house is to be presented to Queen Mary, who supervised its furnishing after Sir Edwin Lutyens designed it.

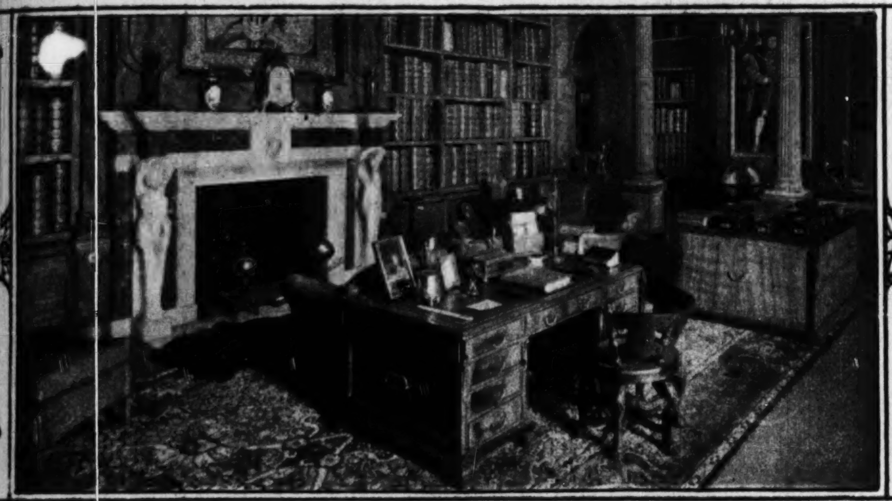
(Photographs from Topical Press.)



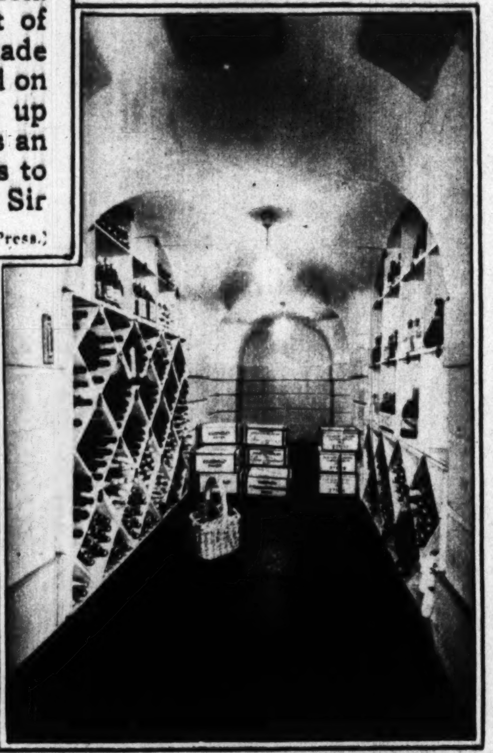
THE KING'S BEDROOM is only twenty-two inches high, yet its gray silk hangings and bed, walnut furniture, rugs, and other appurtenances are perfect. From it opens a bathroom in white and green marble, with every toilet convenience.



THE DINING ROOM has a ceiling by Prof. Gerald Moira, a painting of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort by MacEvoy, and a portrait of the Prince of Wales by Alfred Munnings. Every detail, down to the salt cellars and rolls on the table, is complete.



THE LIBRARY, twenty-eight inches high, is wainscoted in walnut. Books bound in real leather are here—some in manuscript—by Kipling, Bridges, Galsworthy, Masefield, Walpole, and many others. The materials on the writing table include a fountain pen half an inch long. The ceiling is by William Walcot.



THE WINE CELLAR, a pygmy's paradise, is generously stocked with tiny cases and bottles of real whiskies, clarets, and champagne.

"A child should behave
mannerly at table—
At least as far as he is able."

These pieces are sold singly or in sets. All moderately priced, some represent most unusual values, as examination of the designs and workmanship will prove.

N. B. For recommendation of grades of Polarine to use in tractors and trucks consult chart in any Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) Station.

"If you'd followed my advice and stuck to Polarine, you wouldn't have had trouble with your motor. I know. I see the innards of many motors and I know what happens when the wrong oil is used.

"I have torn down all kinds of automobile engines. I have seen many scored pistons and bearings so burnt that you would think they had been filed off, and all because people did not attend to their lubrication.

"I tell you that the engines that come into this shop that are in the best condition are the ones that have been oiled with Polarine all the time.

"Take my advice, brother, use Polarine — it does the business.

"Of course I'm only a mechanic, but I'm a good mechanic and I know what poor lubrication does to a good machine.

"If you rub your hands together long enough they will burn, and if you keep it up the skin will come off. That's friction. But put oil on them and they slide easy without hurting. That's lubrication. And the same thing happens in your automobile. You must have oil between all bearing surfaces all the time—not just oil—but good oil of the right body.

"After you have trundled her over the road for 500 miles, change your oil. There is nothing to letting it go longer. When oil thins out, it's done, and oil is a lot cheaper than bearings.

"Of course, I am talking myself out of a job, but I hate to see a good car abused. I love 'em and when I can make the old motor purr like a kitten I am happy for I have done something—and the biggest help I get is from Polarine.

"The Standard Oil Company chart tells you what grade of Polarine to use. Follow it and you will never make a mistake. You can't see the quality of oil, you know, but you can depend on this chart.

"So long, mister! Remember now, use Polarine."

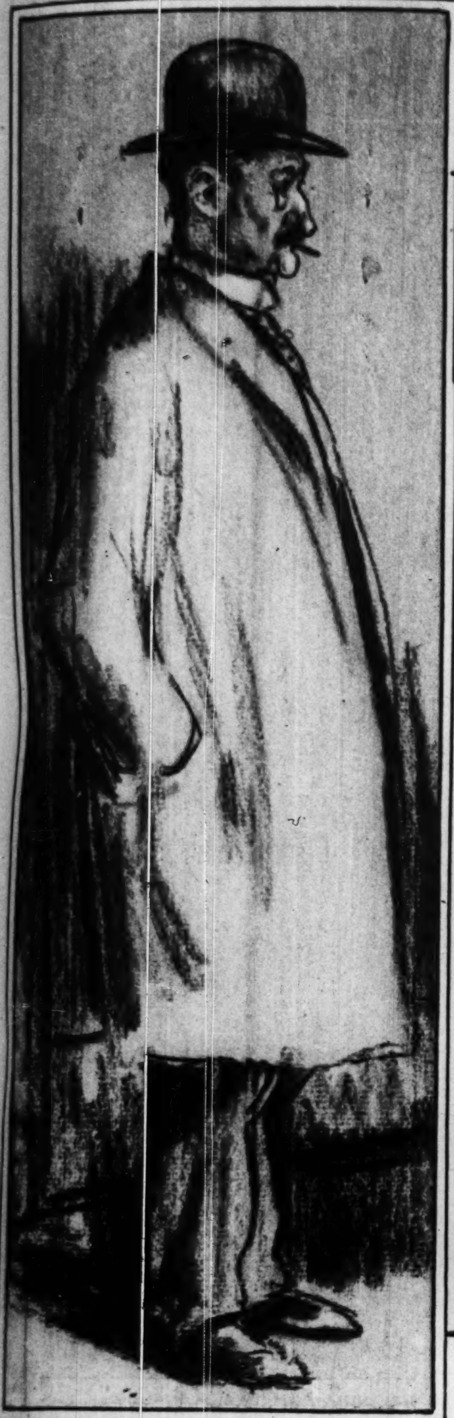
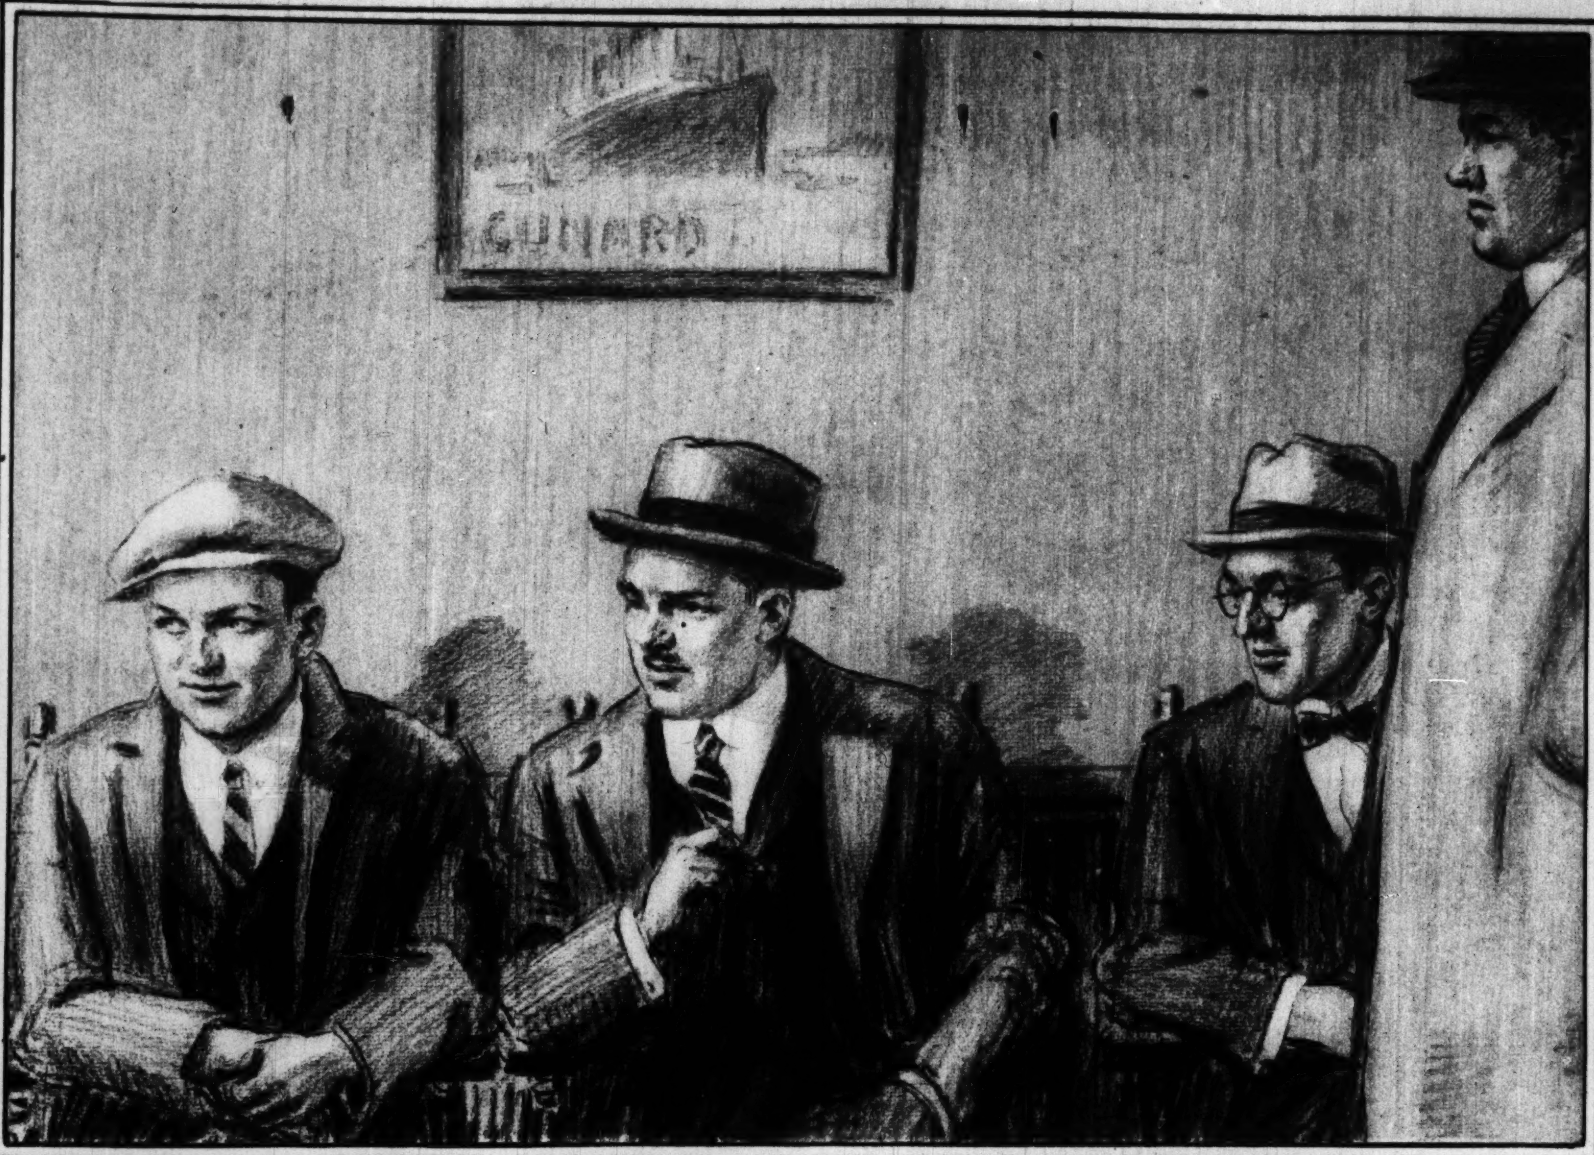
THE SMALL TOWN HOTEL

By W. E. HILL

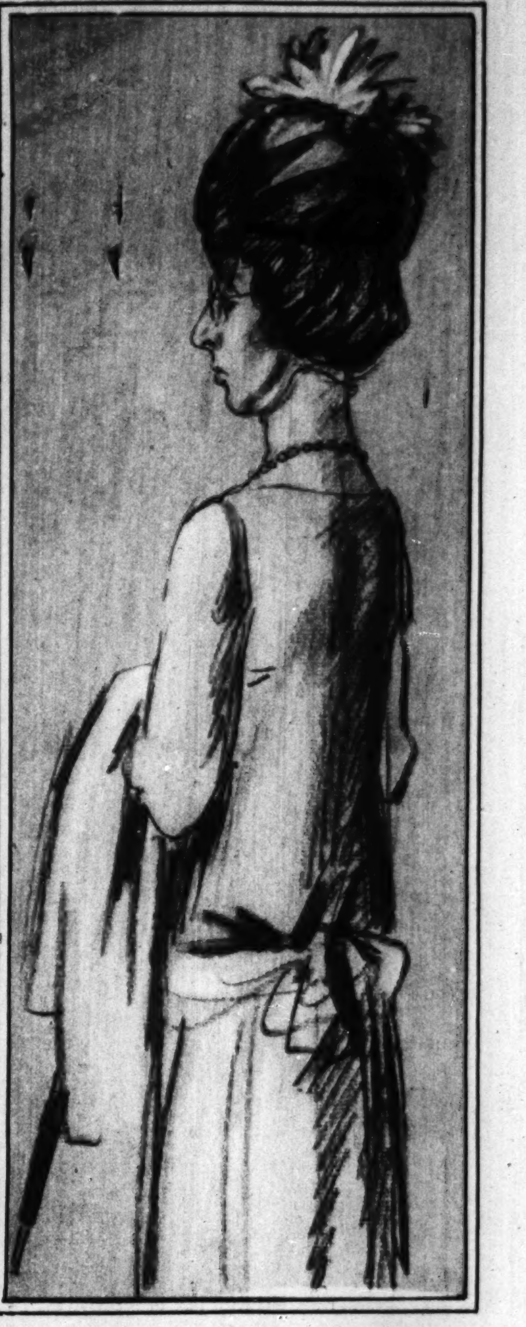
Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.



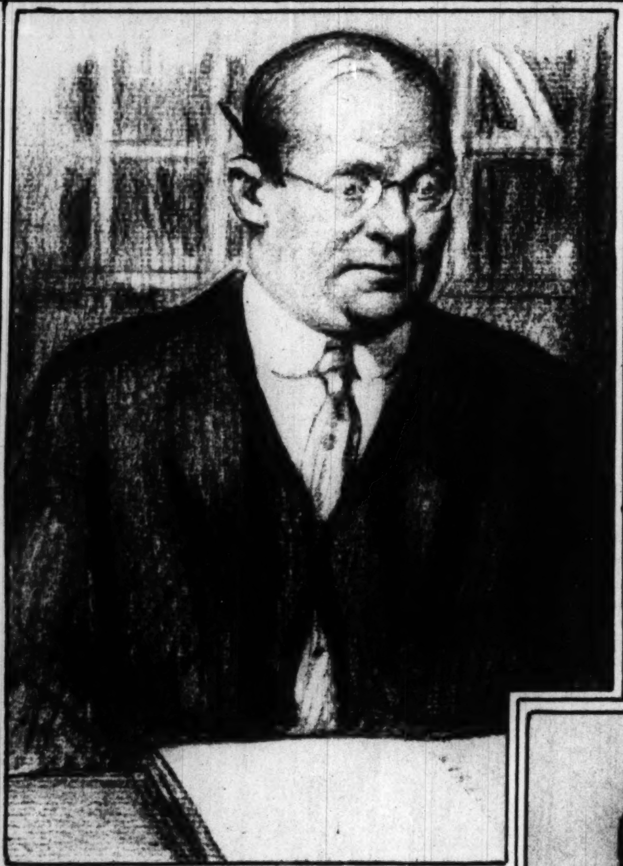
When prohibition came along and they closed the bar at the Commercial House everybody said, "Well, it will be a good thing for poor Mr. Hopewell!" But somehow it hasn't done a thing for poor Mr. Hopewell.



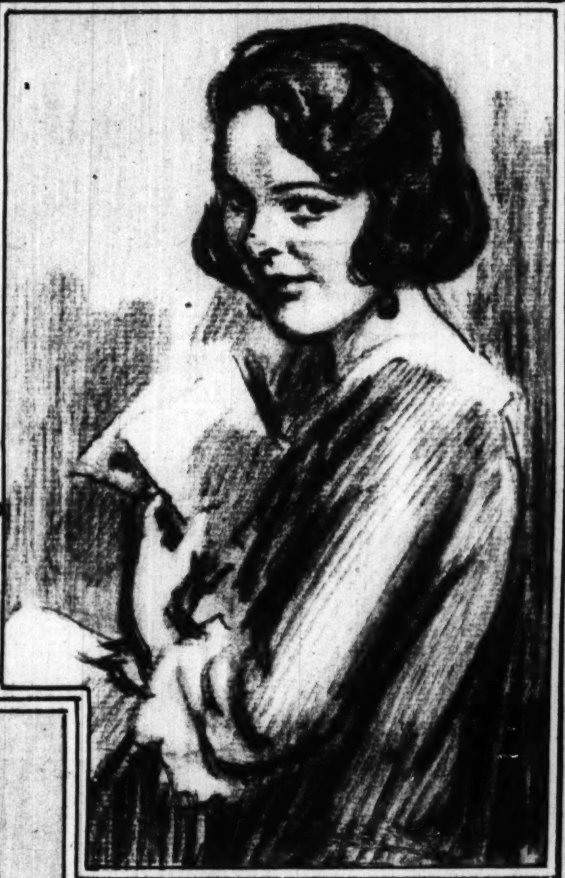
The chairs in the office, showing the shortstop of the ball team and three traveling men eyeing something pretty nifty outside the plate glass window.



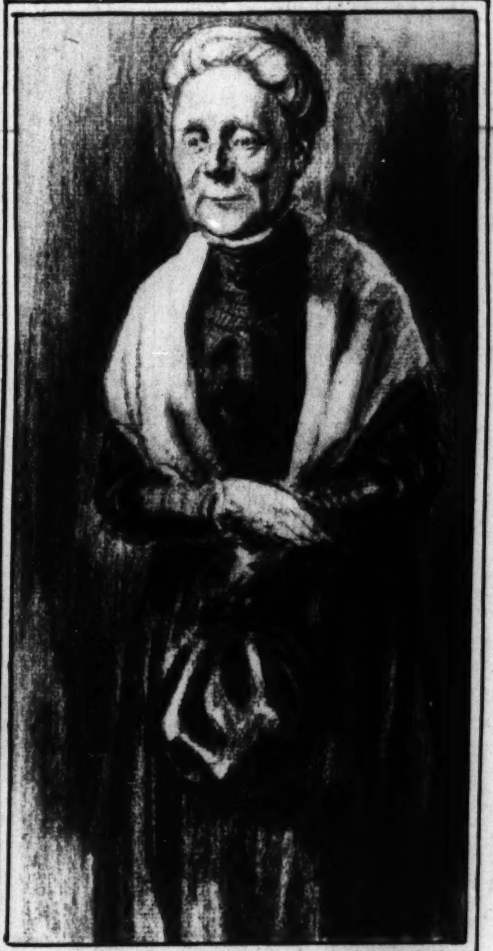
Miss Pryce, the milliner, who lives at the hotel.



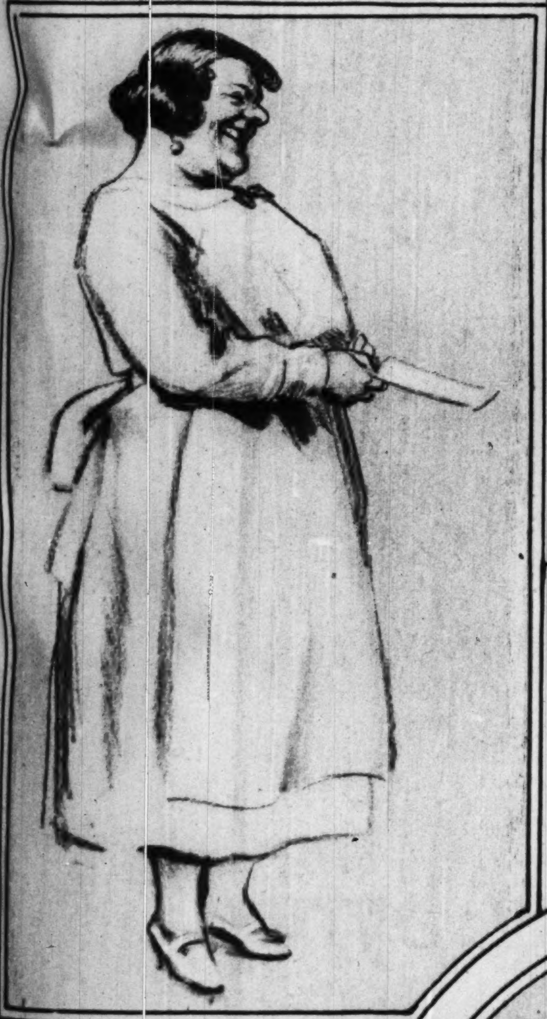
Mr. Perkins, the genial proprietor, about to defend a disputed bill for bed and board.



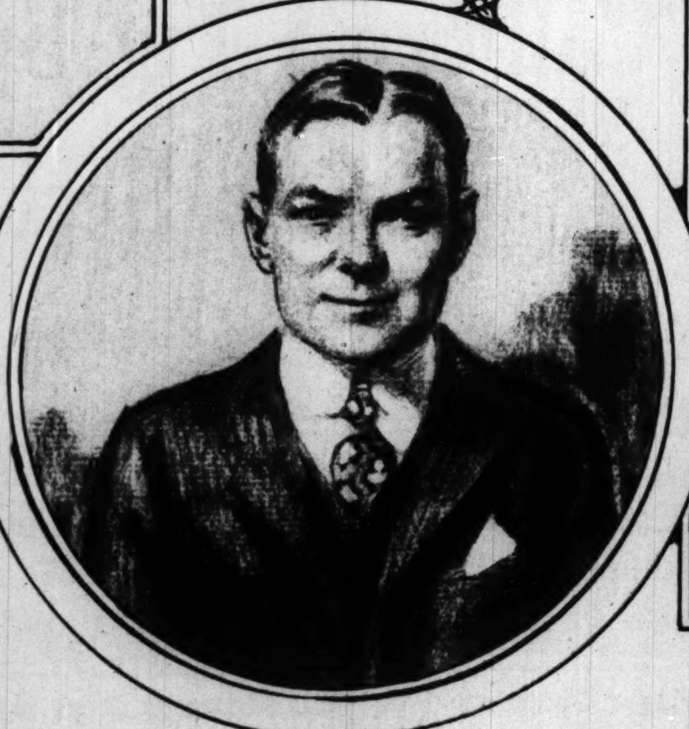
Ella, the beautiful telegraph operator, who works next door and sends out the night letters to the little wives and sweethearts from lonely traveling men.



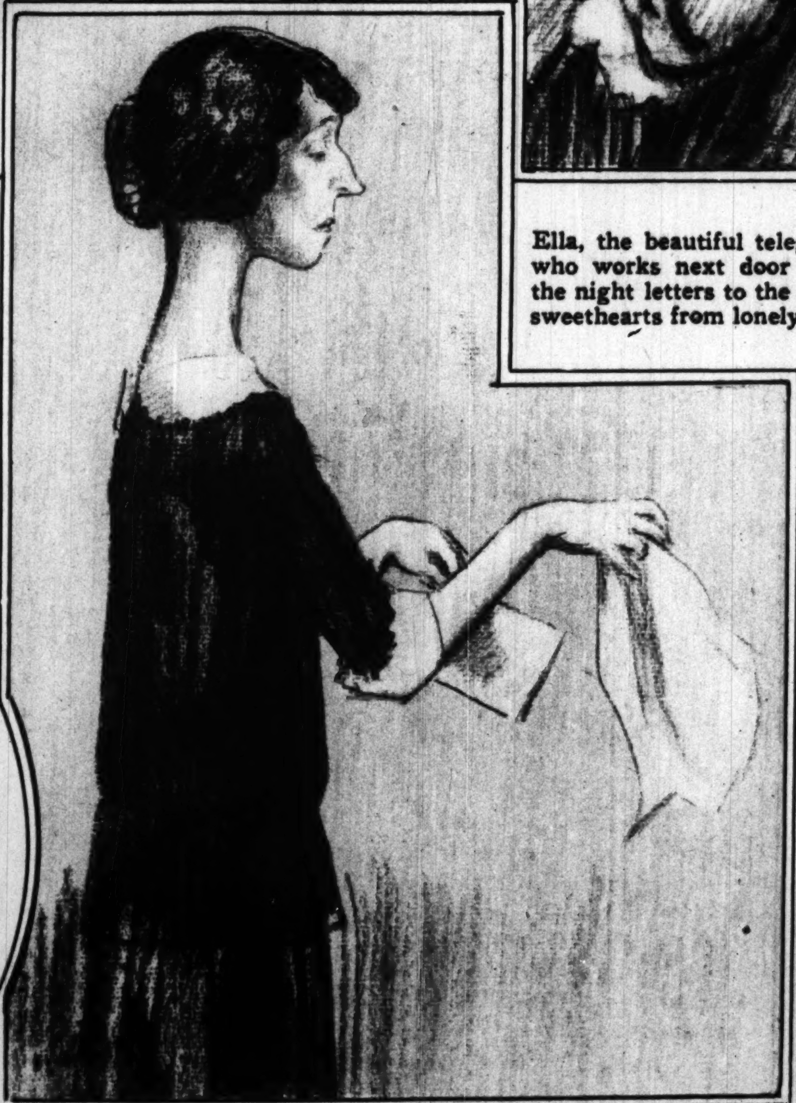
The elderly lady who lives at the Commercial House all the year round has been there ever since they sold the homestead up on Chestnut street. Gets a little tired of the meals and suspects Alpha, the chambermaid, of not dusting now and then.



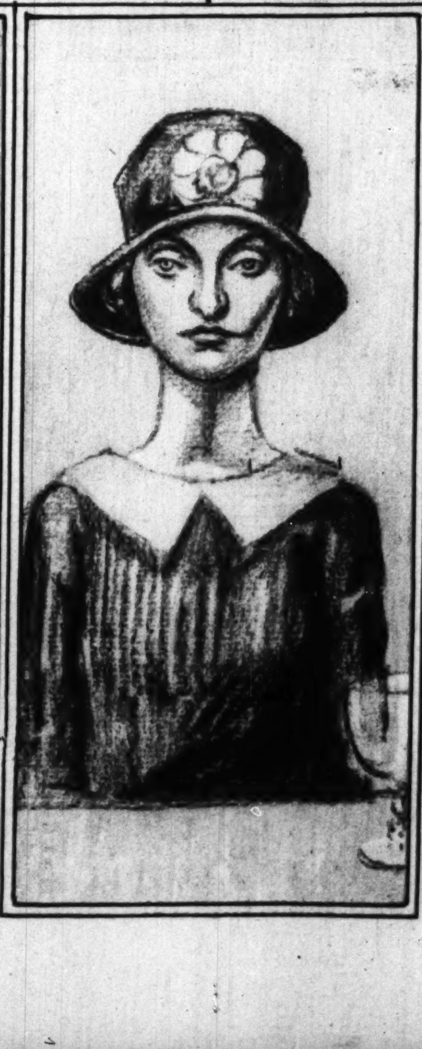
Oh, those traveling men! What one doesn't think of the next one does.



The young man who works at the toggery shop down street, all set for Sunday dinner.



O, the elegant manners of the head waitress as she opens up a folded napkin and hands out the menu card. She works SO hard. In fact, the girls say she works TOO hard. She's killing herself.



The proprietor's daughter home from normal school for a brief vacation.

CLAIRE ADAMS first came into the limelight as winner of a beauty contest and is now appearing in "Daddies." She's not so famous, but most people like her when they see her on the screen. —Mae Tinee.

MAN OVERBOARD! Any upright crew of any law abiding vessel would see that the engines are stopped and an effort made to rescue the unfortunate victim from the briny deep. Here, however, you will notice that if the man doesn't go overboard it will be due to a miracle and nothing less. The picture shows a scene in "Sporting Youth," a Universal picture featuring Reginald Denny. Make you dizzy? —Mae Tinee.

Lingette

Everybody thinks it's silk

YOU like the luster of silk, and its lovely caress to the skin, but you also like the extra wear that cotton gives, and the way cotton can be sent to your laundress, for thorough cleansing in warm suds. It is because Lingette combines silk's beauty with cotton's long service that it is so greatly in demand for lingerie with dainty women everywhere. Lingette is quite the best fabric you can buy for pajamas, negligees, children's underwear, baby clothes and men's shirts. You will find this "fairy fabric"—exquisite in tints and texture—in most good stores, both in ready-to-wear garments and by the yard. But take care to buy only when you see the name on the selvage, or the label in the garment!

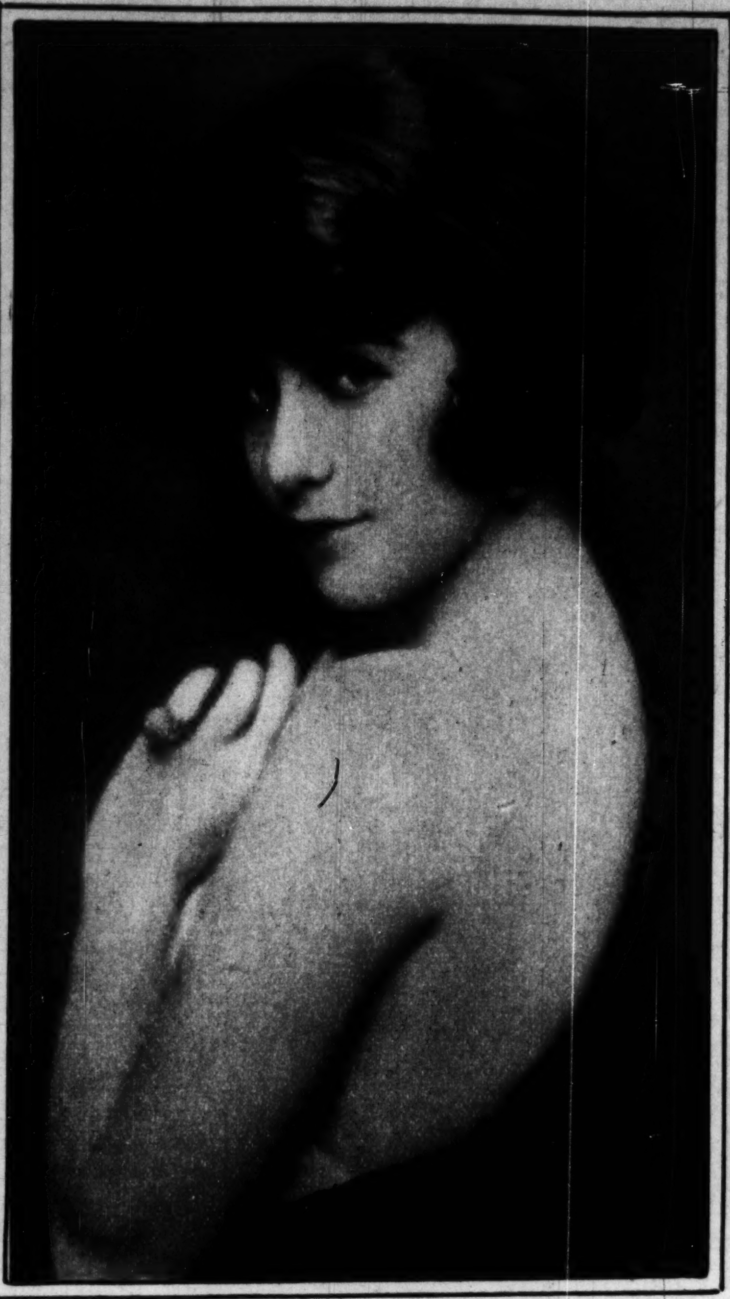
James Buchanan

A LESSON IN AMERICAN HISTORY—Next Wednesday is the birthday of James Buchanan, fifteenth President of the United States. He was born near Mercersburg, Pa., April 23, 1791; made his first public address at a meeting after the capture of Washington by the British in 1814, and became successively congressman, minister to Russia, senator, secretary of state (during the war with Mexico), minister to England and, in 1857, President. During the perplexing times of his administration he gained the name of being an honest man who temporized mistakenly with slavery in a futile effort to avoid the Civil War. He refused to run again in 1860, when Lincoln was elected, and died in retirement in 1868.

(Official portrait by Andrews, from the White House collection.)



TO MARRY A BIDDLE of Philadelphia is one of the American equivalents of annexing, elsewhere, a husband with a title. Miss Grace Moore, prima donna of the latest "Music Box Revue," is about to take the step, her engagement to George Biddle, son of Mrs. A. Sydney Biddle, having been announced recently. The prospective bridegroom, a veteran of the world war, is pictured below.

NYMFAUN
DOUBLE COMPACT

It is the day of slim lines—the smartest fashions indicate it—frock and coat and hand-bag are all suavely slender.

The Nymfaun Double Compact is the smart new powder-and-rouge compact built on the slim, aristocratic lines of the day. Its complete simplicity is a most desirable asset—it opens like a cigarette case, and discloses a large mirror for practical use—a generous-sized powder compact, and a rouge compact, each covered with a satin-backed puff made of lamb's wool. The delightful odor of Nymfaun, the new scent, gives the powder and rouge their name.

Nymfaun Refills

These two-purpose powder and rouge refills are packaged in dainty metal boxes, charmingly decorated in Roman red, black and gold, and may be carried singly, or in the Nymfaun Double Compact case.

Poudre Nymfaun

It is completely charming—the powder, and the box. The odor of the powder, Nymfaun, was originated by an American perfumer using French floral oils. The box looks as though it had just come from Paris in its embossed covering of Roman red, its trailing vines of gold, and its graceful frieze of nymphs and fauns done in black and white.

They (the four at the left, that is) comprise the famous four-mile relay team of the University of Illinois, important figures in yesterday's intercollegiate meet in California. COMES NOW FROM CHILE Senor Quintin Romero-Rojas, heavyweight, to see what can be done about showing some of our native pugilistic notables where they get off. He expects to make his American ring debut next month and, if all goes well, to fight Jack Dempsey before many months are past. You can't keep him from expecting. This picture shows him at his first training in the United States, mounted on the "traction bike," a hefty contraption designed to build muscles.

A tooth paste that does more than clean the teeth temporarily

It gently stimulates the mouth glands to protect your teeth

THIS tooth paste does more than clean your teeth temporarily. It has a definite, gently stimulating action on the mouth glands.

By making these glands flow normally it helps the natural protective processes of the mouth.

Brushing the teeth will not keep back the acids which are constantly forming in your mouth. Only the alkaline fluids from the mouth glands can check these acids permanently.

But these glands have become weak. As long as we eat soft foods that require no chewing, we will have to help the mouth glands work properly or our teeth will decay.

This tooth paste increases the protective fluids of the mouth

As soon as Pebeco enters the mouth, the fluids from these glands begin to flow more freely. They wash all through the mouth; in between the teeth where the tooth brush cannot reach. They thoroughly neutralize the acids as fast as they form and keep the teeth safe.

Pebeco leaves your whole mouth in a healthy, live condition. Made only by Lehn & Fink, Inc. At all druggists.

149 WORDS A MINUTE WITHOUT AN ERROR! Can you do it? If you can, you might dispute with Miss Bessie Friedman her title of "accuracy typist champion of the world." She is shown here demonstrating to a class of high school students that 109 words a minute can be typed from dictation. Her greater speed was achieved from what is known as "plain copy."

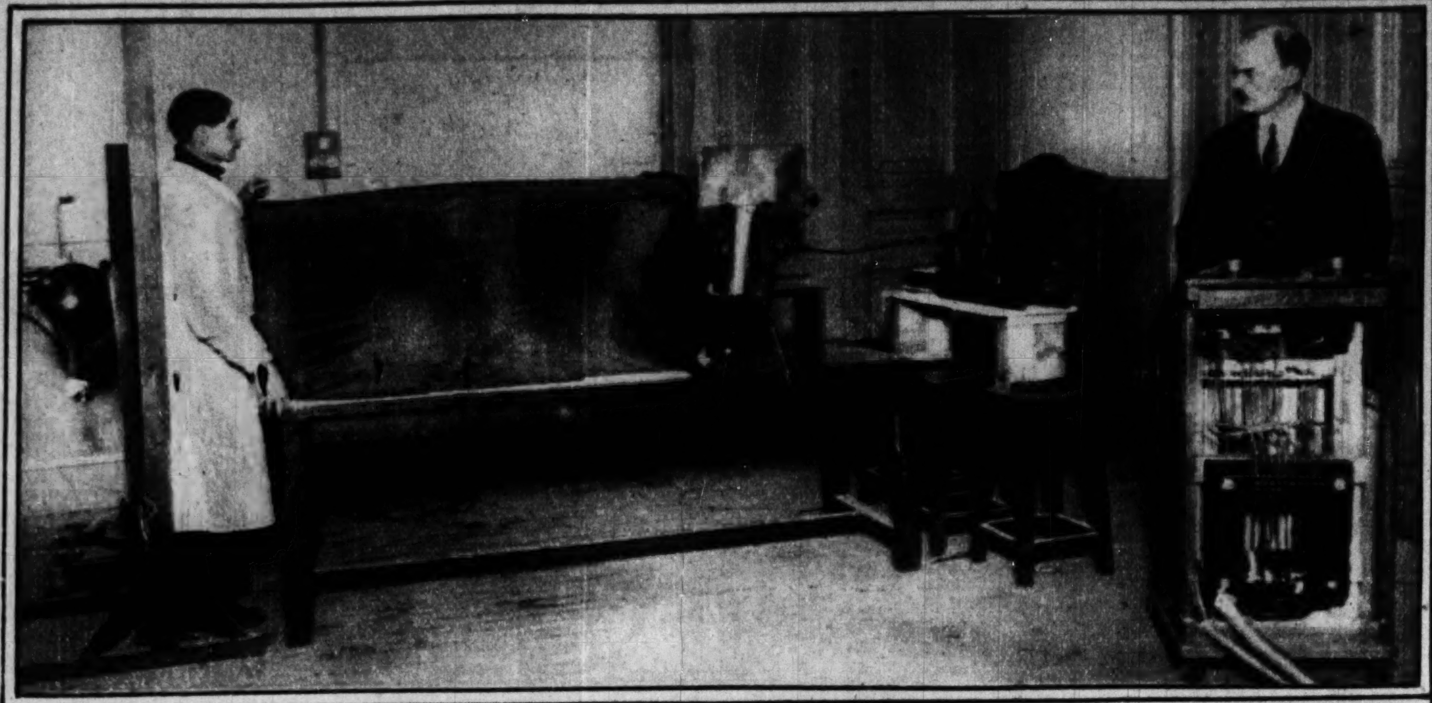
Girls! Use Moist Hair Brush
—The Effect is Startling!

Try It! Instantly a Gleamy Mass of Beautiful Hair

You actually see plain, flat, oily or colorless hair become soft, fluffy, lustrous and abundant in a moment.

When combing and dressing your hair, just moisten your hair brush with a little "Danderine" and brush it through your hair. The effect is astonishing! You can do your hair up immediately and it will appear twice as thick and heavy—a mass of gleamy hair, sparkling with life and possessing that incomparable softness, freshness and luxuriance,—yet not greasy, oily or sticky.

While beautifying the hair "Danderine" is also toning and stimulating each single hair to grow thick, long and strong. Hair stops falling out and dandruff disappears. Get a bottle of delightful, refreshing "Danderine" at any drug or toilet counter and just see how healthy and youthful your hair becomes.



MAKING MOVIES OF HEART BEATS—A French scientist, Dr. Lomon of Paris, has developed a method of making photographic studies of the heart in action. Here he is, at the right, manipulating his apparatus. The subject stands with his back to a tube which emits X-rays, while a long screen extends from his chest to a specially sensitized motion picture camera.

Suspected—or Seen?

HOW do you wear your powder? Flagrantly that all the world may see? Or subtly, like faint fragrance, with beauty that does not meet the eye too harshly. Someone has said that powder should be suspected—but not seen. Perhaps he is right. At any rate, there's a powder now, it seems, for every skin. And in the putting on there's art which takes account of time and place and lighting.

One of the sanest beauty authorities in America has written a little book which tells, among other things, all about the ways of using powder. It's called What Every Woman Does NOT Know, and it's free to every purchaser of Bourjois MANON LESCAUT* Face Powder, which, by the way, you can secure in a wide and beautifully blended color range.

Most druggists sell MANON LESCAUT. Those who do will offer What Every Woman Does NOT Know with the package you buy. If your druggist does not have MANON LESCAUT, show him this advertisement and suggest that he order from his jobber. If you are not within range of a dealer's services, simply tear out the coupon below and mail it to us now with $1.50. We will send you a full-size box of MANON LESCAUT and a free copy of What Every Woman Does NOT Know by return mail.

*The Home of Mr. Arnold Joerns,
445 Oakdale Ave.,
Glencoe, Illinois.*

Howard Hammond, Evanston, Illinois. Architect and builder.

For this Glencoe home
—a beautiful new roofing color scheme

Like a richly colored tapestry is the roof of Mr. Arnold Joerns' home in Glencoe, Illinois. This beautiful color scheme is obtained by the use of slate-surfaced shingles of jade green, black pearl and weathered brown, set off by a background of tile red.

The most distinctive of these colors—weathered brown—is found only in the Richardson quarries of Georgia. Millions of tiny slate flakes in this rare color not only add new beauty to a roof but seal each shingle permanently against weather and fire hazards. Years of weathering only deepen and enrich their mellow tones.

Architects are especially enthusiastic over the rare color effects made possible by this weathered brown, particularly when it is blended, as it is here, with other Richardson shingles of jade green, black pearl and tile red.

The Richardson Multicrome Roof

This, however, is but one example of the beauty secured in the Richardson Multicrome Roof. Many other effects are possible—one to harmonize with each color scheme and sure to please your taste. Wholly distinctive is the opal roof, built from the new Richardson opal shingles.

The new colors, opal and weathered brown, are used only on the Richardson Super-Giant Shingle—famous for its beauty and economy.

With its inner foundation of Richardson felt, for fifty years recognized as the best; coated and saturated with Viskalt, the vacuum-processed waterproofing, 99.8% pure bitumen, the Super-Giant assures lasting beauty for your roof.

The Super-Giant Shingle—50% thicker—100% more rigid, and 35% more economical in cost of laying.

Prove the Facts Yourself

Go to your nearest dealer in lumber, hardware or building material, or to your contractor, and ask to see the color combinations in Richardson Multicrome Roofs. Also ask to see the Super-Giant Shingle in weathered brown and opal. Note the rare colors and larger size. Then compare it with other shingles—the difference will convince you.

Meanwhile, send for our beautiful new booklet Roofs of Distinction, showing the exclusive combinations of Richardson Multicrome Roofs, and containing valuable roofing information. Or, ask for our booklet, Roofing on the Farm. Just use the coupon below.

For every roofing need there is a Richardson product—from Lok-Top Asphalt Shingles to Rubbertex Roll Roofing with Pyramid Kaps. If you are an accredited distributor of building materials, perhaps you can secure the Richardson franchise for your territory. Just write us.

THE GUMPS
AIN'T SCIENCE WONDERFUL?
OH GEE! THIS IS THE HARDEST PROBLEM I EVER HEARD OF - THAT OLD TEACHER ALWAYS GIVES ME THE HARDEST LESSONS IN THE BOOK - I KNOW WHAT I'LL DO - I'LL ASK MY FATHER TO HELP ME - HE'S THE SMARTEST MAN IN THE WHOLE WORLD -
PAPA - WILL YOU HELP ME DO THIS PROBLEM? I'VE TRIED TO FIGURE IT OUT A MILLION TIMES BUT I ALWAYS GET THE WRONG ANSWER -
THAT'S RIGHT, MY BOY - ALWAYS COME TO YOUR DADDY WHEN YOU WANT A CORRECT SOLUTION TO ANYTHING - WHAT'S YOUR PROBLEM -
IT'S MY ARITHMETIC LESSON AND IT HAS ME PUZZLED - IF I DON'T HAVE THE RIGHT ANSWER TOMORROW THAT MEAN OLD TEACHER WILL KEEP ME AFTER SCHOOL AND THEN I'LL MISS MY PRACTICE WITH MY BASEBALL TEAM -
WELL, I WOULDN'T HAVE SUCH A TERRIBLE CATASTROPHE HAPPEN FOR THE WORLD - LET ME HEAR THE PROBLEM -
A FARMER BUYS 100 HEAD OF YOUNG STOCK WITH $100.00 - CALVES ARE $10 A HEAD - PIGS $3.00 AND LAMBS 50¢ - HOW MANY OF EACH DOES HE BUY TO GET THE MOST FOR HIS MONEY?
DO YOU MEAN TO SAY A BIG BOY LIKE YOU IS STUCK BY SUCH A SIMPLE LITTLE PROBLEM AS THAT? I THOUGHT IT WAS A MATHEMATICAL QUESTION REGARDING HOW FAST LIGHT TRAVELS FROM PLANET TO PLANET - WELL, IT MAY BE EASY FOR YOU 'CAUSE YOU'RE SMART BUT IT FOOLS ME -
NOW TO BEGIN WITH THE FARMER HAS $100.00 - SIMPLY FIND OUT HOW MANY CALVES, PIGS AND LAMBS HE COULD BUY WITH THAT SUM AND YOU HAVE THE CORRECT ANSWER - NOW RUN AWAY A FEW MINUTES AND FATHER WILL FIGURE IT OUT -
I'LL HAVE TO DO THIS QUICK AS I WANT MY BOY TO KEEP ON THINKING THAT HIS FATHER CAN DO ANYTHING FASTER AND BETTER THAN ANYONE ELSE IN THE WORLD -
NOW LET ME SEE - IF CALVES WERE $10 A HEAD HE COULD BUY NINE CALVES, THREE PIGS AND TWO LAMBS - STILL, IF HE BOUGHT LESS CALVES AND MORE PIGS HE WOULD GET MORE FOR HIS MONEY - HE COULD BUY 30 PIGS, ONE CALF AND - - - - NO, THAT'S WRONG - HE WOULDN'T HAVE A CENT LEFT TO BUY LAMBS WITH -
NOW I HAVE IT - FIRST HE'D BUY A CALF FOR $10 - THEN A LAMB FOR 50¢ - THAT WOULD BE $13.50 - $13.50 GOES INTO $100.00 - NO, THAT WOULDN'T COME OUT EVEN - NOW IF HE PAID $50 FOR 100 LAMBS AND $10 FOR A CALF HE WOULD THEN HAVE $40 LEFT TO BUY 13 PIGS - NO - THAT LEAVES A DOLLAR OVER -
NOW LET ME SEE - I'LL PRETEND I AM THE FARMER - I HAVE $100.00 TO INVEST IN STOCK SO I DIVIDE MY MONEY INTO THREE EQUAL PARTS - THAT GIVES ME $33.33⅓ - WRONG AGAIN - THE FELLOW WHO STARTED THIS PROBLEM MUST HAVE HAD A GRUDGE AGAINST THE HUMAN RACE - BUT I'LL GET THE RIGHT ANSWER OR DIE IN THE ATTEMPT - ARE YOU FINISHED YET, PAPA?
FINISHED YET! WHAT DO YOU MEAN BY WASTING YOUR FATHER'S VALUABLE TIME WITH SUCH A SIMPLE LITTLE PROBLEM? I'M SURPRISED AT YOU - NOW YOU TAKE A LITTLE TIME - USE YOUR BRAIN - AND WHEN YOU HAVE THE RIGHT ANSWER BRING IT TO ME -
GEE, PAPA - YOU SAID YOU'D HELP ME -
AND I AM GOING TO HELP YOU TO BE A STRONG, SELF-RELIANT BOY - WHAT DO YOU THINK I WOULD HAVE AMOUNTED TO IF I HAD RUN TO MY FATHER WITH EVERY LITTLE PROBLEM - NOW YOU'RE A SMART BOY - USE YOUR HEAD - AND WHEN YOU GET THE RIGHT ANSWER I'LL GIVE YOU A QUARTER -
IT'S A LUCKY THING FOR THAT BOY THAT I DIDN'T GIVE HIM THE RIGHT ANSWER - A LITTLE MENTAL EXERCISE IS THE BEST THING IN THE WORLD FOR HIM - NOW DAYS CHILDREN ASK FOR TOO MUCH HELP - BUT IT WILL NEVER BE SAID OF ANDY GUMP THAT HE HELPED TO MAKE HIS SON STOP THINKING FOR HIMSELF -

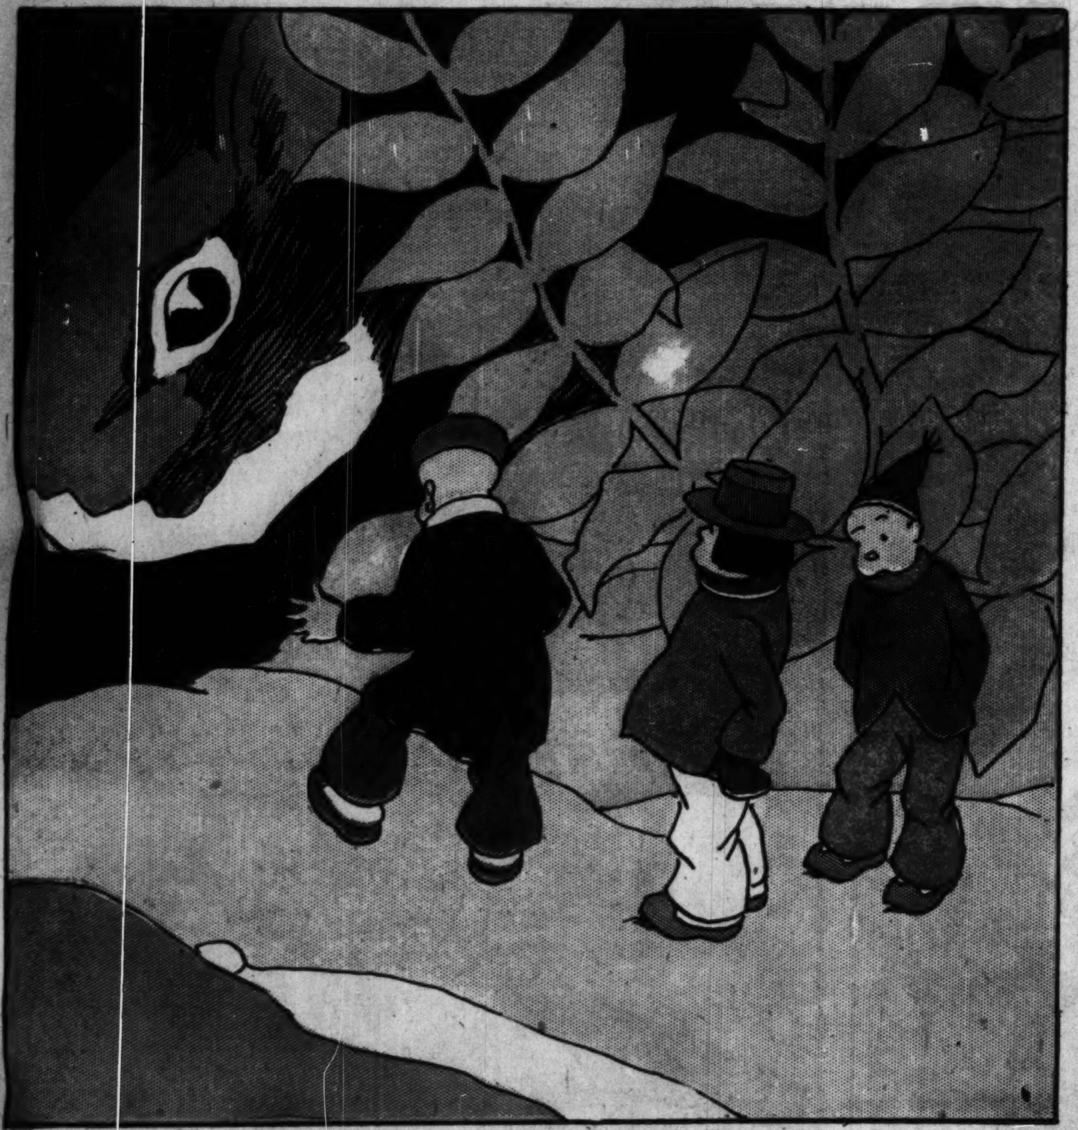
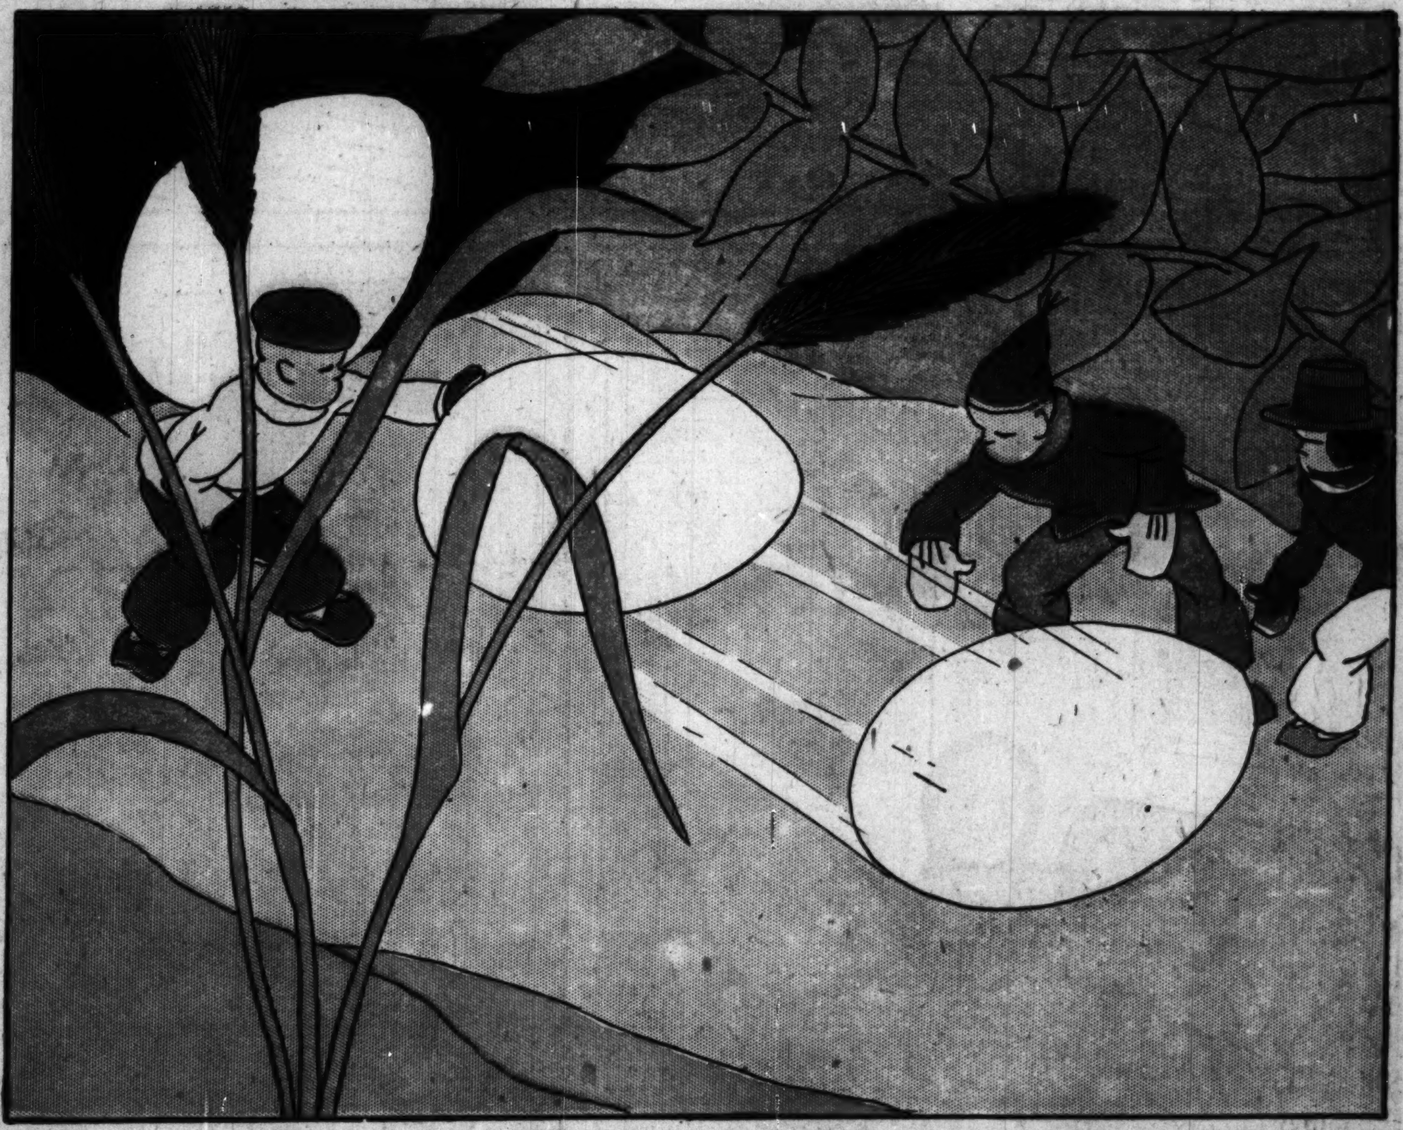
HELP WANTED.
STRONG MEN MICE AND FROGS TO HELP WITH EASTER RUSH.
INQUIRE AT THE EASTER RABBIT'S HOUSE.

Grandpa and the Twins were walking in the woods one afternoon when they sat down to rest, and immediately the twins began to make embarrassing inquiries concerning the Easter rabbit. "Does the Easter rabbit lay all the Easter eggs?" asked Jerry. "Does he lay them all colored?" inquired Tom.

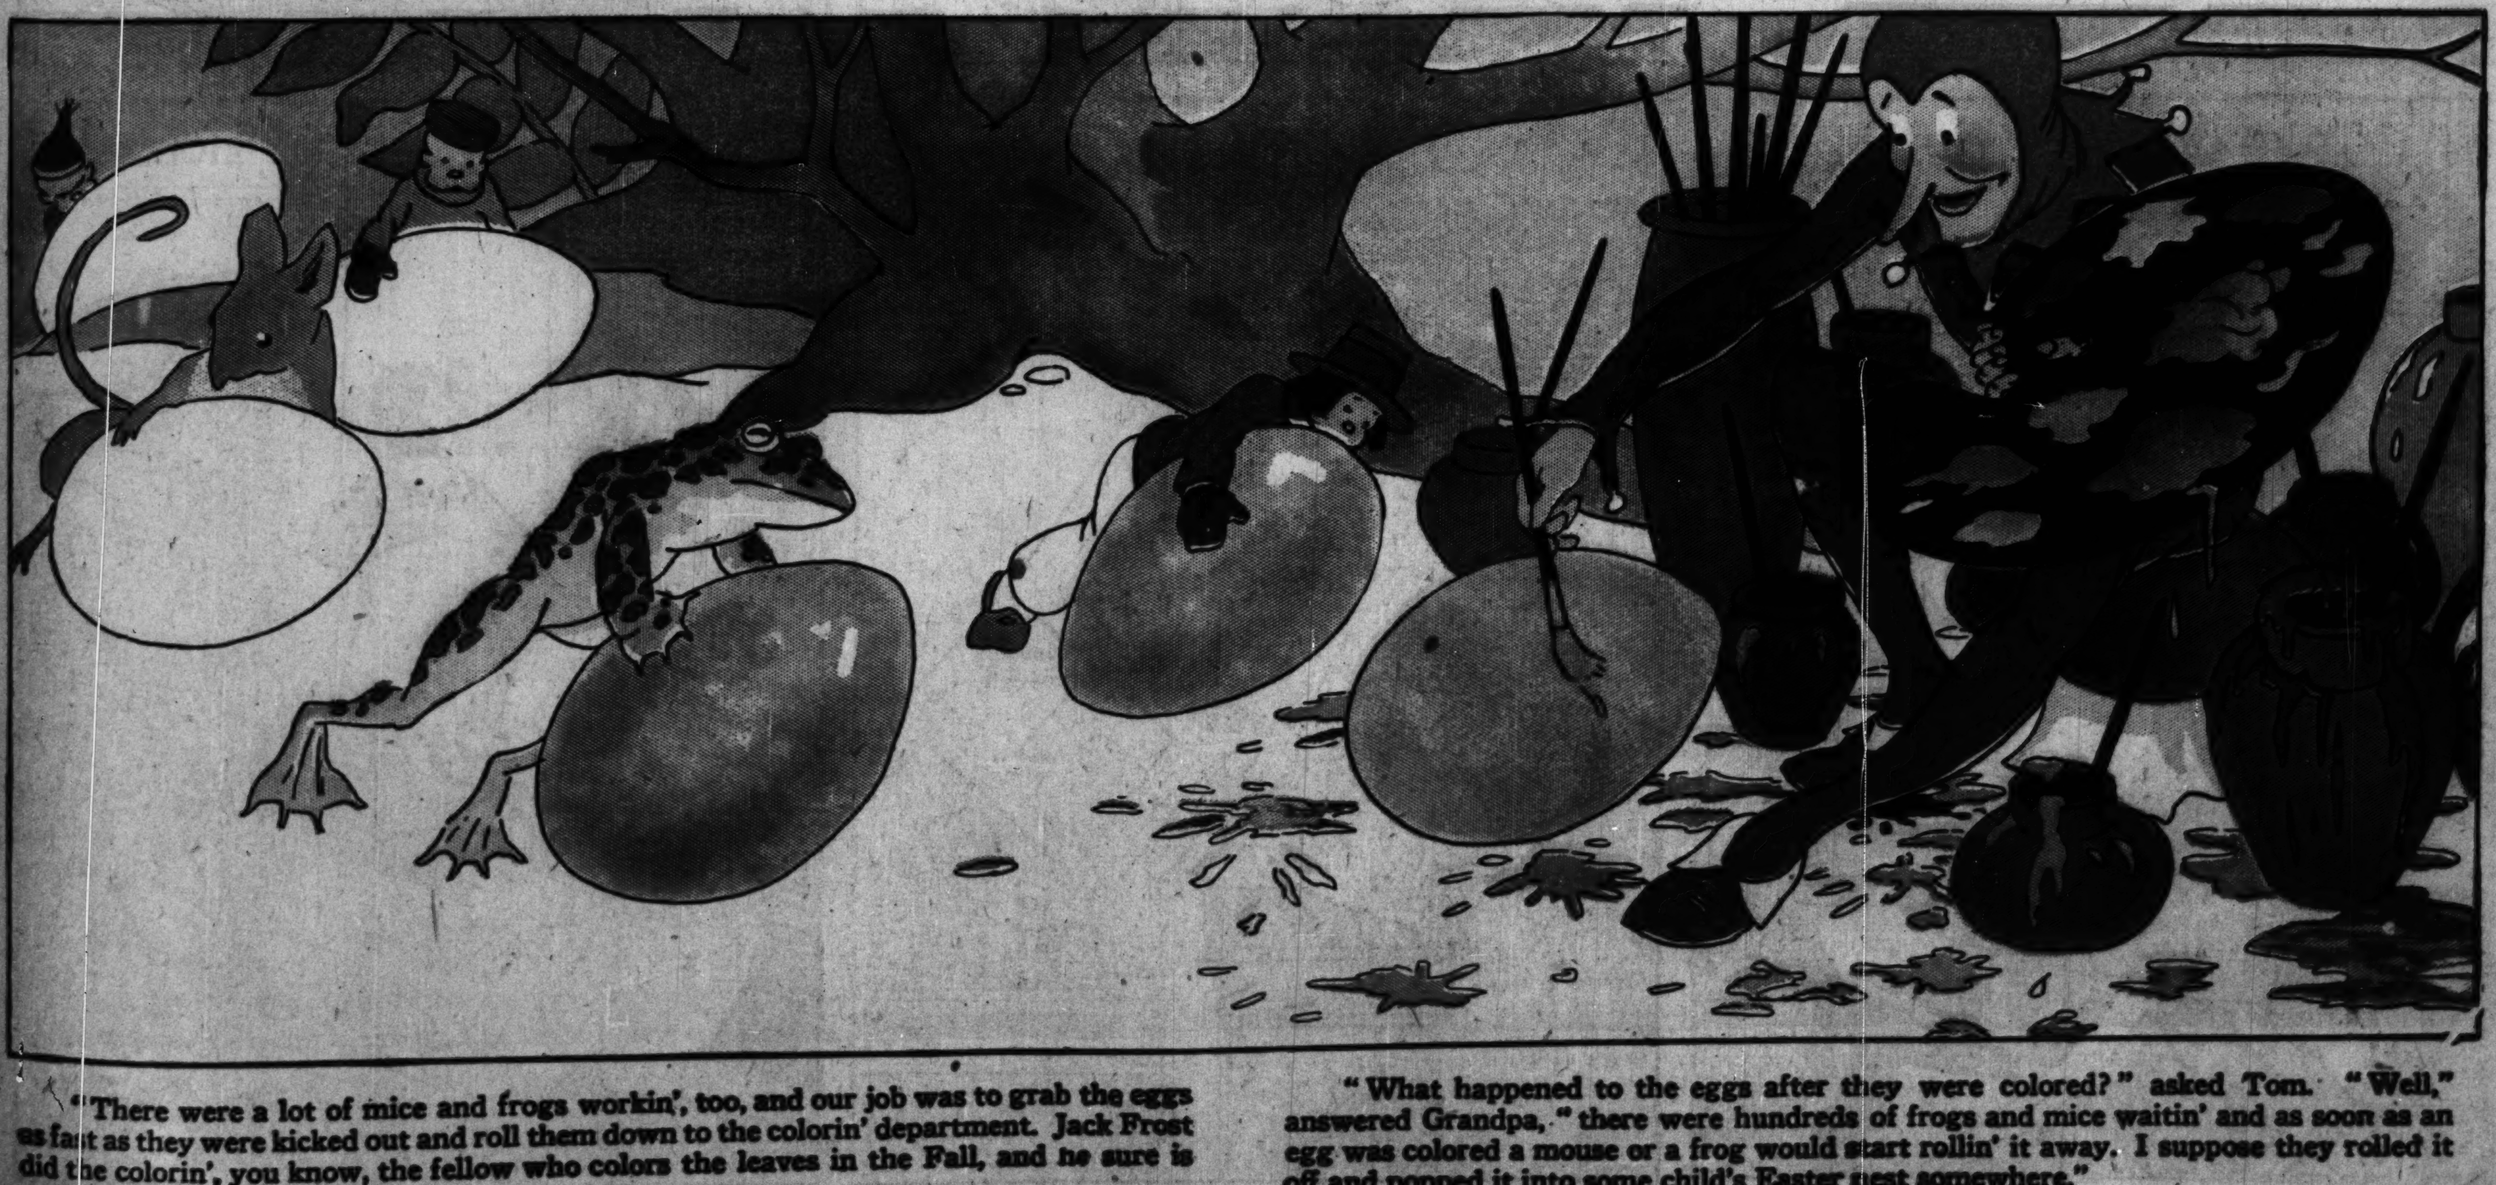
"Well," answered the old Gentleman, "I ought to tell you something about the Easter rabbit, I worked for him one time. It was in the Spring of '51. Three or four of us were walking through the woods one morning when we came across a sign askin' for help with the Easter rush.





"We were lookin' for work, so we traipsed over to the Easter rabbit's hole and asked for a job." "Was he a chocolate rabbit?" asked Jerry. "No, regular rabbit," said Grandpa. "He told us to come early next day and to be sure and bring asbestos gloves. I thought that was kinda funny, but——

"We certainly needed those gloves. That rabbit laid Easter eggs so fast they came out of his house hotter than a baked potato. Every time he laid an egg he'd kick it out of the house with his hind foot. He sure did keep us busy, and the only rest we got was when he got a cramp in his leg from kickin' eggs.



"There were a lot of mice and frogs workin', too, and our job was to grab the eggs as fast as they were kicked out and roll them down to the colorin' department. Jack Frost did the colorin', you know, the fellow who colors the leaves in the Fall, and he sure is some artist."

"What happened to the eggs after they were colored?" asked Tom. "Well," answered Grandpa, "there were hundreds of frogs and mice waitin' and as soon as an egg was colored a mouse or a frog would start rollin' it away. I suppose they rolled it off and popped it into some child's Easter nest somewhere."
